cessary further than suggested in last months' article, except as given above. But both food and water should be abundant, fresh and sweet and given as often as it is eaten; but in no case should so much be given that a portion is left to sour and become unhealthy. As a rule I do not believe in giving or using tonics, egg or tonic foods, nor anything of the kind to young chickens, as they do not require it. If you have a moderate sized yard or run for them, with sufficient grass to furish plenty of green food, and then give plenty of healthy food and clean water, you will find they need nothing else. Nature needs no medicine to do its work-it is only when nature's laws are violated that medicine becomes necessary. Where, however, the fancier is compelled to confine his flock to a limited yard a little appetising tonic may be necessary. With this I leave you for the month.

Do not give up a setting of eggs if the hen has strayed away or was shut out from them until they have become cold. I had one sitter that by accident was shut out from her nest for nine hours, and the eggs were quite cold, but I put her on again, not expecting to get any chicks, or at least not more than two or three; this was about four days before the chicks should chip the shell. On the 23rd day one chick came out, and by the 26th I had seven all doing well.
