JUNIOR GYMNASTICS.

You shall learn whom Robby Dewa,
 Drilled and exercised as comrades,
 Not for greater skill in numbers,
 Not for knowledge deep of letters,
 Not for triumphs in the classroom
 And renown on fields of science,
 But in movements acrobatic,
 For the strengthening of the muscles.
 Proudly on the mattress stood he,
 Proudly gazed he 'round about him,
 On the youths who daily practise,
 On the bars, and rings, and ladders.
 When he saw a form athletic,
 Full of life and ardent vigor,
 Forthwith to his side he called him,
 Forthwith in his band enrolled him,

There to train the youthful gymnast,
 Well in movements acrobatic,
 For the strengthening of the muscles.
 If perchance on form phlegmatic,
 Fell his gaze discriminating
 Darker grew his darkened visage,
 As he spurned the sluggard from him.
 Finally, five friends he counted,
 Friends to whom his plans he trusted,
 Friends to whom he gave his teachings
 And who honored him, their leader.
 Like a monarch of the forest,
 Towered among them Christinadolf,
 Mighty were his deeds of prowess,
 Fearless were his agile antics ;
 Plaudits rang out from his comrades
 As with shout of ' I go ! I go !'
 Round upon the bar he twisted.
 Turned and twisted till his members
 Seemed framed of unfeeling metal
 And his spine of gutta percha.

Next comes Oscar, Guehochristopher,
 He, most graceful in his movements,
 Movements rivalling the leader's,
 Sure and safe in all his motions.
 In a somersault aerial,
 None is there whom he calls master,
 None is there whom he calls equal.

Yet young Murfio-Mybill-Lee
 Smallest of the group of gymnasts,
 Slightest in his build and muscle,
 Bravest in his efforts daring
 Full of promise for the future,
 Hears most often the chiefs " tu pas."

Breaks asunder its heart oaken,
 When upon it Edmug-Wire mounts ;
 Heavily bears his mass upon it,
 And when from the bar he tumbles,
 Great the shock that shakes the building.
 Last comes Ky-Us, our "Aye-aye Done"
 Smiles he as he grasps the oak bar,
 Smiles he as he tries to follow,
 All the efforts of the leader,
 And when perchance his grip he misses,
 And from the floor he's raised and bandaged,
 Smiles he long and smiles he loudly,
 At his success in these gymnastics.
 These our heroes embryonic,
 Fostering muscle for the future,
 These are they whom Robby Dewa
 Drilled and exercised as comrades,
 Not for greater skill in numbers,
 Not for knowledge deep of letters,
 Not for triumphs in the classroom,
 And renown on fields of science,
 But in movements acrobatic
 For the strengthening of the muscles.

ERIN'S FESTAL DAY.

The celebration of St. Patrick's Day at the College was the quietest and most unpretentious for years past, yet in all the qualities of true patriotism there was no falling off, but rather an evident and admirable increase. A few weeks ago while the Times' case was yet in progress and its result very uncertain, the students met and decided that under the present circumstances the annual banquet on St. Patrick's Day could not fittingly take place. At the same meeting it was decided that
