

that can never be communicated through third parties, or by correspondence or diplomatic exchanges.

"In essence, I am able to say to you, my fellow Canadians, that there is real hope for the maintenance of the peace in spite of the great problems that still confront us, because there is among most of the leaders of the nations, a determination to confine and confound the schemes and ambitions of those who would destroy that peace. There is a high resolve among the free nations to work together constructively and positively as never before in history, to maintain a strong and united front as an effective deterrent to aggression.

"There is another vital reason for the importance of these talks with world leaders. The normal diplomatic channels are still of the utmost importance, but there are times when direct communication between those in high authority, often by long distance telephone, becomes desirable and indeed essential. I need only mention the fact that there is a world of difference between speaking to someone, under such circumstances, whom you have never met, and the kind of frankness and understanding that is possible with one whom you know personally.

"I can think of no one whose personal friendship and understanding has meant more to me in this regard than the Rt. Hon. Harold Macmillan, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom. In London we resumed those very important discussions which have been going on for some time, on many levels of government, about the trade and other relationships of our two countries. I need remind no Canadian of the importance of those traditional markets for our goods and services, because they have, from the earliest days, been the backbone of our development and prosperity. It is here, and in the related Commonwealth countries of the British trading orbit, that we must expand our mutual trade, if our Canadian economy is to have that level of earning from overseas trade which is necessary to offset our excess of imports over exports in our trade with the United States.

"I am glad to report that there are excellent prospects for further expansion in Canada's trade with Britain in the immediate future. One of the major contributing factors has been the success of the Trade and Economic Conference held in Montreal. The spirit of mutual self-help engendered there is still very much alive in Britain and in many other Commonwealth countries.

"We crossed from the Old Land to France, where, for the first time, I met General de Gaulle. France has passed through a time of crisis in the evolution of her Parliamentary institutions. I shall not comment on the prospects of the new Fifth Republic other than to say that I found the new head of that ancient state to be a man dedicated to his fellow citizens and prepared to devote his talents to the cause of France and her allies among the free nations. Our own direct interest as Canadians in the future of that great country was once again brought home to me in my visit to the headquarters of NATO, the Atlantic bastion of freedom against the floodtide of communism.

"I must pass over quickly my visit to the other NATO countries, West Germany and Italy. I had previously met Chancellor Adenauer. Our talks added more to my admiration for him and for what he is doing to maintain, for the rest of the free world, that vital salient of the front line of freedom. Here we met our Canadian troops and their families. It is with the greatest pride that I report to all Canadians that the men and women of our Armed Forces stationed in Europe are adding lustre to the name and fame of Canada by their exemplary conduct and professional efficiency.

"I stopped briefly in Italy for talks with Prime Minister Fanfani. The people of Italy have long been engaged in an internal battle against communist infiltration. Its success is vital to world peace. It is my impression that the battle is being won and that this great nation, to which the Western world owes so much of its heritage, will stand firm on the side of freedom.

"After an all too short meeting with Prime Minister Manushar Eghbal of Iran, I went on to Pakistan, in which delightful country we met many Canadians engaged in the great hydroelectric project at Warsak. This is a tremendous undertaking and the fine spirit of cooperation between Canadians and Pakistanis here is doing much to develop a new and important relationship between Canada and this populous new nation. It is a relationship which must, in the long run, prove mutually advantageous to both our peoples.

"In Pakistan, as in India which we visited next, I experienced at first hand the warm desire of all the Asian members of the Commonwealth for the quickest possible bridging of the gulf between the East and the West of the freedom nations. That it can and will be achieved I have not the slightest doubt, if we do our part. As a member of the Commonwealth, Canada has a significant role to play both in Asia and in Africa, where the vast majority of the members of the Commonwealth now live. The ties that bind are potentially strong. These new nations have joined us of their own free will and choice. They are extending to us the right hand of fellowship and it is my impression that, on both political and economic grounds, Canada is in a better position than any other Western nation to clasp these hands of friendship and so bring about an understanding between East and West.

"The highlight of the Indian visit was, of course, our meetings with Prime Minister Nehru. I think he would allow me to say that
