furnishes tables comparing the ratio of inebriety in the three prohibitory states Maine, Kansas and North Dakota, with the proportion of drunkenness in the state of Wisconsin. He selected Wisconsin, he says, partly because the license fee in the state in 1903 was a low one ($200), but principally because low one ($200), but principally because in many of the cities, among them Milwaukee, beer is to all intents and purposes the common drink of a large percentage of the population. The tables show: In 20 cities of the prohibition states, with a population of 378-752, there were 9033 arrests for drunkenness in 1903, while in 22 Wisconsin cities, with a population of 689,232 the arrests for drunkenness numbered 7043.
