At The Theaters

J. Humbird Duffey, who sings the leading tenor roles with the Royal English Opera Company, now completing their first transcontinental tour which started as the Gallo English Opera Company and is being completed under the direction of John J. McArthur, has the distinction of being a singer of such wide range that he has been classified as a basso, a baritone, and a tenor, and has been treated to remarkable notices in each classification. Reviewing the production of Frank Damrosch's "Messiah" by the New York Oratorio Society, one of the critics said:

"J. Humbird Duffey, the bass soloist, was best in "Who May Abide." His rendition of "The People That Walked in Darkness," was slightly hampered by loud orchestration.
Another wrote:

In Darkness," was slightly hampered by loud orchestration.

Another wrote:

"The soloists were Inez Barbour, soprano; Mrs. Adah Campbell Hussey, contralto; Berrick Van Norden, tenor; and J. Humbird Duffey, bass. Of the four, Mr. Duffey was best in vocalization and his singing of the different florid numbers was greatly admired and enthusiatically applauded.

The foregoing notices appeared in the New York papers in 1906. In the following year the papers reviewed the opening of the Brockton (Mass) Choral Society and said that Mr. Duffey, the leading baritone, sang most beautifully and expressively the prologue from "Pagliacci" and the toreador song from "Carmen."

Three years later the Boston Journal on December 19, 1910, carried the following paragraph in review of the Handel and Hayden Society's "Messiah."

"J. Humbird Duffey, the tenor re-siah."

"J. Humbird Duffey, the tenor, recalled the stirring days of Evan Williams. His rendition of "Thou Shalt Not Break Them With a Rod of Iron" has not been sung with greater effect in recent years."

The company offers "The Mikado" as the matinee attraction today and as the matinee attraction today and the matinee attraction today and a double bill tonight, "Trial by Jury" and "Pirates of Penzance."

Tom Brown, the leader of the Clown Saxophone Band in "Jack O'Lantern," which comes to the Grand Friday and Saturday next, says that the saxophone was the discovery of a Belgian named Sax, about fifty years ago.

"He conceived the idea of putting a reed mouthpiece on a brass instrument with the result that the saxophone is a sort of cross between a horn and a clarinet, but was never regarded as a legitimate instrument by band leaders until Libretti, some years ago, heard us play it and introduced it into his band."

"Gilmore would never use one, nor did Sousa," continued Brown, "for it was the belief that the saxophone could not keep in tune. When we went to England some half a dozen years ago we went to all the big musical instrument establishments of London, trying to get a saxophone, and not a dealer had one, and several said they never had heard of such a thing, although it had been played on the continent for half a century."

Tom Brown is now the provid and happy owner of the first saxophone ever perfected through the kindness of Dr. A. Waggener of Omaha, Nebraska, a noted collector of rare musical instruments. Seats now on sale for all performances.

COUNSEL FOR THE DEFENCE BRINGS COURT AND JURY TO TEARS-HEARTRENDING APPEAL SAVES MYSTERIOUS MURDERESS FROM SENTENCE OF DEATH.

With his heart's blood he pleaded. It was his first case, but this did not deter him from throwing himself heart and soul into the defence of this wretched woman, who, accused of murder, facing death sentence, refused to make any disclosures to aid in clearing up her case. When he started talking, the jury were indifferent, nodding, half asleep, wishing the case would come to a speedy end that they might escape the musty courtroom and seek the comfort of their homes. But the young attorney had courtroom and seek the comfort of their homes. But the young attorney had felt a great pity, a great sorrow for this miserable woman, and his sorrow and pity prevailed in his eloquence. The jury and the entire courtroom were soon sitting with breathless interest, following each flowing sentence, their entire hearts being won by the appeal of this young man—and he did not know that it was his own mother whose life was at was his own mother whose life was at stake, that the miserable woman in the prisoner's box had committed this crime, to save him from everlasting dishonor

WALLY REID COMES TO LOEW'S TOMORROW IN "A DANCING FOOL."

By night he shone as Broadway's dance sensation, and drew down two hundred dollars weekly. But by day he worked as a dollar-a-day clerk for his moth-eaten Uncle Enoch in the jug business. Then he decided to abandon dancing for jugs'. Foolish? Not a bit of it. For he injected into the rundown jug business the same jazz and cheerfulness that made him a star in the dance, and soon Uncle Enoch found himself capitulated under a flood of orders. And the girl who stood by the youth through thick and thin? Well, she received her reward also. It all happens in Wally Reid's new Paramount Arteraft screen comedy, "The Dancing Fool," which will grace the screen at Loew's for the last three days of the week. The leading woman is Bebe Daniels. A funny Sunshine Comic and Loew's Pictorial, with a new bill of Loew's supreme vaudeville, completes the program. Loew's supreme vaudeville, complete

CONSTANCE BINNEY IN "39 EAST" Reginald Denny, that athletic young man who plays Napoleon Gibbs in the Realart production of "39 East," starring Constance Binney, which will be seen for the last time today at Loew's, says the next time he makes a picture he will prepare for it by going on a raw meat diet. In one of the scenes Mr. Denny performs a very neat back somersault over the back of a park bench, and rolls down a hill. It was necessary for Denny to make this turn twenty times before the director said O. K., and besides getting very dizzy it was in the middle of July. A merry Alice Howell Comic, Loew's Pictorial, and a classy bill of neat vaudeville, headed by a musical comedy revue, "Fads and Frolics," completes a real bill of amusement. LAST TIME TODAY AT LOEW'S.
