The results from some lessons show that the different pupils sending in work are more evenly matched. There s a vast difference between the six best initials sent in and the last six on the list, who were yet considered worthy of honorable mention. A few were not given honorable mention, because their work showed; that they had altogether missed the point of the lesson. Next term try not to overlook any of the instructions. Ruby Murray's letter is fine in hape, proportion and placing. The ribbon tied violets, however, do not seem to belong to the same world. They should form a background instead of a rival point of interest as they are at present. Fern Stokes' "I" is ingenious.
