such an association as this should not only exist, but be ever exerting, through the activity of its visitors, a healthful influence in exposing the fraudulent devices of unprincipled mendicants. Not less needful are the incessant and self-denying labors of the visitor in order to the discovery of those who have a just title to the relief of their necessities.

The Board, then, would seek to impress upon the members of the association, as one great and general duty, a constant and cordial support to its visitors; which will best be shown by strict adherence to the rule which binds them "to relieve no one, except through the visitor of the section in which the applicant lives." It is no doubt much easier to afford relief at once, without the intervention of a visitor, than to go through the forms which reference to him involves; but, it should be borne in mind, that every infraction of its rules is a blow at the permanence and usefulness of the association.

The Board now retiring from the management of the affairs of the association, impressed, as the result of their own experience, with the great value of the rules which have been cited, have deemed it not inappropriate for them, at this time, to urge the recommendation that no relaxation in the observance of those rules may be sanctioned, but that all would strive to follow them implicitly.

It is one of the impressive and encouraging "signs of the times," that similar associations are rapidly multiplying in Great Batain and in the United States of America: and, from the process of horough systematization which is going on, it is not too much to hope that great effects will yet be realized in the restraint of mendicity, the alleviation of the evils of pauperism, and a diminution of the facilities for imposture.

Let us, then, not faint nor be discouraged, but continue our beneficont enterprise, animated by the belief that it has already been productive of good, and that it will, if faithfally prosecuted, achieve, in still
