Cape Nome's golden incentives and pos sibilities have apparently thrown those of the Klondike into the shade, and Dawsor, it is said, already presents the appearance of a "boom town" whose former adventitions prosperity 18 fast departing. The fact that Nome is a part of Alaskan possessions, [and that, hence, American miners will not be subject to the burdensome exactions imposed upon them by the Cana-dian authorities at the Klondike, together with the fact that it is more easily access sible than; the Klondike, has already drawn to it thousands of American miners from the Canadian gold-fields and elsewhere, and it is anticipated that these will be reinforced during the present spring and coming summer by thousands of other less experienced fortune hunters, to the possible enriching of a few, and the certain disappointment of the many.

A writer in the Review of Reviews, who has visited Cape Nome, and has acquainted bimself with its conditions and the prospects they present, asserts, as the result of his investigations, that no man who is not young, sound and strong, and who is not the possessor of necessary mining equipments, should attempt the Cape with any hope of success.

find these prudent provisions necessary. The climate is so severe for at least seven months of the year, that only those whose physical condition is unimpaired can hope to withstand it. The thermometer during these months ranges from thirty to

In short, the writer referred to leaves i to be inferred that the descriptions of Cape Nome, as given in glowing and perhap interested newspaper accounts, are to be taken with more than the traditional al lowance of salt; and his conclusion, based upon observation and experience, that 'Cape Nome is a good place for the few to go to, but a better place for the many to keep away from,' is worthy to be seri-ously pondered by those immediately in-terested.

One of the early settlers of Orleans County, New York, was John Anderson, a man of positive character, a great lover of truth. "I demand that a man's word shall be as good as his bond," he often said, and lived up to it. In "Pioneer History of Orleans County," New York, Mr. Arad Thomas tells a characteristic anecdote of Mr. Anderson,

A neighbor owed him twelve shillings, which he promised to pay in a few days. Mr. Anderson said to him : "All right, I hope you will. For it's worth a shilling to dun a man any time."

A few days later the two men again met and the neighbor mentioned his debt and again promised to pay. As they met oc casionally afterward, the debtor would dun himself, but paid nothing, the device would buccess. as had mining experience so much ter, and if, after the expense of doubt is met, he possesses the doubt is met, he possesses the took from his own pocket a shilling and diversity. Why a man who cannot see thus is, to my mind, wholly unworthy of any wile let alone a "cross clean woman." Warriors and statesman always have their meed of praise and when they do suffer men record it, but the long sacrifice ol woman's days passed without even a thought or word. An axiom familiar to all says that "woman was made for the man of whom she was a part, made to attract his eyes and keep his heart" is truly convictive. If the woman is in continual discontent and agitation why it is, most likely, that she cannot make realities correspond with her conceptions. Anger, we know, is the whetstone of strength, in an equality of other terms it will make a man or woman prevail; for nothing is able to stand before a fire which is once enraged, and there is a benefit too from having a "cross clean wife" for Socrates found it so. Xanthippe was a woman of a very troublesome spirit, she could never move Socrate to a passion and being 'accustomed to bear patiently this heavy burden at home he was never in the least moved by the most scurrilous and abusive tongues he met with abroad and every man should get consola tion from the fact that everyone has his particular plague and if his wife is his why he is very happy who hath this only. The tone of conversation between hus-band and wife should be invariable benerolent, they should differ without asperity and agree without dogmatism "step by step one goes very far" and by this proverb which is the wisdom of many but the wit of one I find; myself overrunning my rights, acting as though I had a clearance order to run regardless.

It is a known fact that with narrow-sould ed people as with narrow-necked bottles the less they have in them the more noise they make in pouring it out, I cannot re-frain from quoting the following poem, "Comparisons of woman," on account of its applicability.

An eastern prince had his vizers once as sembled, and asked them what a woman most resembled, one said: "The sun the source of light which made all nature gay when woman's present, all is bright, and dull when she's away."

"Woman," cried one, "we can compare to naught so justly as to air; 'tis light, in deed, and apt to fly; but it unites the earth and sky; so woman at creation given, stood as a link twixt man and heaven." "She's like the rainbow," said a third, "that when the elements are stirred to strife, dissolves the storm. It's aspect does sweet calm diffuse; we're dezzled by it's brilliant hues, it's symmetry of form, But who such pride possessed ? -- sure, no man; 'tis an illusion-so is woman." The prince, who found his council thus divided, left the perplexing question un-decided.

'You will soon lose your caste !' shoute a low-caste man to a high caste sepoy, who had roughly refused him a drink of water. 'You will,' he added, 'have to bite cartridges covered with the fat of pigs and cows !' That was one of the first mutter ings of the great mutiny. Et field rifles and cartridges to fit them had been sent out to India from England. The cartridges had their paper greased with lard and tallow. The men were required to bite off the end of the cartridges before p

Hindu is his caste. An English gentleman, recently arrived in India, while going up the Ganges, be-held an aged Hindu, lying exhausted on the bank. Lifting up the native, the Englishman poured down his throat a little cologne, the only stimulant he had at hand. The man revived, but he had lost his caste by swallowing the liquid administered by a man of no caste. Several times a week from that day the Englishman was solemnly cursed by the old Hindu whom he had saved from dying. He had made the man lose caste sgainst his will.

Something in it. The question, 'What's in a name ? may be answered from one point of view by narrating a bit of experience confided to one of his friends by a man named Coward. Now he it known that there are branches of the Coward family who can trace an honored lineage back to old colonial days and are quite as proud of their ancestry as as the Vere de Verses or Fitz Montmor encys.

American Field. The Indian had been calling' the moose by means of a birch bark horn. A moose responded down the stream, and and a second soon bellowed

As the two approached, the stillness of As the two approached, the shinkes of the night air was broken by their impres-sive grants, and by and by they were heard ripping and tearing the rees with their horns. Soon, with remendous roars the two rivals advanced from the shelter of the trees and met on the even bog. Gabe, the guide, said, Come on,' and advanced toward the scene of combat, tollowed by the Englishman. The moose had locked horns in deadly strife. Aiming as carefully as he could by the light of the moon, the hunder, fired at the nearer bull and brought him to the ground. The next move made by the second moose was a startling one. Instead of seeking reluge in flight, as was anticipated, he charged upon the hunters. The Eng-lishman fired again and missed. The next instant the bull was upon them.

The Indian stood fairly in the path the furious animal. In leaping to one side he stumbled and fell. The moose rushed over him, breaking the Indian's leg with one of his heavy hoofs.

The moose ran only a few rods and then, turning about, began to bellow and paw up the bog. Although suffering intense pain, Gabe, lay motionless and uttered no sound, realizing that in this course alone lay safety for himself.
