MUSLIN FOR BLOUSES.

The use of unbleached and bleached muslin as a blouse medium is interesting and makes a strong appeal both from an utilitarian standpoint and one of attractiveness. One number fashioned of this material has a slashed front outlined with orchid, green and orange wool floss, tie ends of the wool fnished with painted wooden beads tieing at the throat. Strips of pine green muslin are applied at the sides and again on the sleeves.

White mignonette fashions a long model featuring lovely color combinations, vari-shades of green wool combining with purple and biege to form natural appearing flowers, the design appearing on the blouse proper as well as on the short kimono sleeves. White organdie and volle are also given prominence as desirable Summer frocks, the exquisite colors employed in adornment adding greatly to their charm. The use of unbleached and bleache
