Take, again, the cases of servant girls and mechanics, -who are sadly needed in the towns of our Province, but particularly in St John. What semblance of energetic effort has been made to bring such per sons from Britain? Through private exertion something has been done, but the individual immigrants might almost be counted on one's fingers. Miss Rye, alone, an English lady, animated by philanthropic motives, has really grappled with the as very satisfactory, taken in connection question, and at a considerable expense to with the fact that home manufactures were considerably developed during the herself, both in time and money, has same period. Another satisfactory feature brought to this country a number of young is the increase of free goods :girls such as our house-keepers have so long been clamoring for. The Home Societies understand the people they have to deal with. They know what these people require and expect, and the extent of their means; they know best how to appeal to them,—how to move them,—how to move them,—how to move them,—how the source, and when the source and when the source and when the source and when the source are therefore the receipts that evening the source of the receipts were $6,800. Miss Nilsson was cosely that evening. She sang in "Faust" and was handsomely paid for the effort at $2,400.

The first night of this very popular opera was also a very productive occasion, the balance sheet showing a total gain of about $6,500. The managerial spirits must have been kept up to a tolerable level, for the average of the receipts, taking the season fair share of the expense of forwarding paying thing to have a famous voice, and that we probably shall never have opera in this republican country at its best. and it would be amply repaid in even a few years residence in the Province. We believe the very best results are attainable by co-operation with the English Societies, and that little good will result without it To this duty the Government should earnestly address itself without loss of time,
