At the last moment with the noose round his neck and the black cap over his head, Kowalski sobbed out a few words in the Polish language. Father Ocaszewski, the attending clergyman, who had accompanied the prisoner onto the scaffold held up a hand of warning to the hangman, exclaiming: "He wants to make a statement."

Ellis turned to Deputy Sheriff Zealand, who was officiating in the absence of Sheriff Middleton, and asked if it would be proper to permit the prisoner to speak. Major Zealand assented and the black cap was raised from Kowalski's face, long enough to permit him to mutter a few broken words in Polish. Denies His Guilt

Father Ocaszewski interpreting, said: "He says he is innocent and had nothing to do with the first crime."

Hangman Ellis adjusted the black cap again and kicked the lever controlling the trap.

Kowalski's last statement was only in keeping with the protestations of innocence which he had repeatedly made. All yesterday he spent the time sobbing and muttering in his own language although at times he quieted down and perused a Bible, which was left him. He was completely broken in spirit and towards midnight dropped into a slumber which lasted until six o'clock this morning.
