Can you spare a job???

OTTAWA (CUP) — Economists call it the discouraged worker effect. The person who can't find work and has stopped looking, calls it giving up.

Either way, the unemployment statistics look better than they really are because students leave the labor force.

Across Canada returning students experienced 13.7 per cent unemployment in August, not counting the discouraged worker effect, according to Statistics Canada. Canadian youth unemployment reached an average of 19.4 per cent, ranging from 21.5 per cent in B.C. to 8.7 per cent in Manitoba.

And there's not much hope for the future.

The federal government took a futile shot at addressing the crisis by funding a special conference on youth unemployment at St. John's in August. But the four day affair ended in total disarray, and a proposal to start a Young Canadian Action Congress did not get approval from delegates who came from around the country.

The conference reached a pathetic conclusion when the Ontario delegation withdrew its recommendation to distribute the conference final report, saying it contained nothing worth publicizing.

Meanwhile, the federal employment department has recently prepared a study which says young people can expect 19.4 per cent unemployment well into 1985.
