A SUGAR CAMP SOON TO BE A SCENE OF ACTIVITY

The history of the maple sugar making industry in Canada has been one of steady advancement. From the crude methods employed by the Indians of old have been evolved the present day evaporator, tin buckets, and spouts, and the modern means of keeping the products of the maple pure and clean. The industry has lost most of its old-time romance and is now one of the profitable side-lines on many Ontario and Quebec farms, and in the Maritime Provinces as well. Read the article on page 3, written by Mr. G. A. Cottingham, of Chateauguay Co., Que., whose sugar camp appears in the illustration.
