> pursuit. With all the other girls of the village opportunities multiplied, but he could scarcely get ten minutes alone with Patty. The deacon's orders were absolute in regard to young men. His daughters were never to drive or walk alone with them, never to go to dances or "routs" of any sort and never receive them at the house, this last mandate being quite unnecessary, as no youth in his right mind would have gone a-courtin' under the deacon's forbidding gaze. And still there were sudden, delicious chances to be seized now and then if one had his eyes open and his wits about him. There was the walk to or from the singing school, when a sentimental couple could drop a few feet at least behind the rest and DARKENS GRAY AHIR exchange a word or two in comparative privacy; there were the church "circles" and prayer meetings and the intervals between Sunday services, when Mark could detach Patty a moment from the group on the meeting house steps. More valuable than all these, a complete schedule of Patty's various movements here and there, together with a profound study of Deacon Baxter's habits, which were ordinarily as punctual as they were disagreeable, permitted Mark many stolen interviews, as sweet as they were brief. There was never a second kiss, however, in these casual meetings and partings. The first, in springtime, had found Patty a child, surprised, unprepared. She was a woman now, for it does not take years to achieve that miracle; months will do it or days or even hours. Her summer's experience with Cephas Cole had wonderfully broadened her powers, giving her an assurance sadly lacking before, as well as a knowledge of detail, a certain finished skill in the management of a lover, which she could ably use on any one who happened to come along. And at the moment any one who happened to come along served the purpose admirably, Philip Perry as well as Mar-

would prove a valuable convert, Philip ing scrutiny of her sister's eyes and the gentle probing of her questions, credit upon him if he succeeded in inucing her to subscribe to the stern creed of the day.

Philip was a very strenuous and slightly gloomy believer, dwelling considerably on the wrath of God and the doctrine of eternal punishment. There was an old "pennyroyal" hymn much in use, which describes the general tenor of his meditation—

Mr. theoretic or a rivel subjects colleged to the light, but she had a foolish, generous loyalty that urged her to keep Waitstill quite aloof from her own little private perplexities.

"She will only worry herself sick," thought Patty. "She won't let me marry without asking father's permission, and she'd think she ought not to aid me in deceiving him, and the temporal

My thoughts on awful subjects roll— Damnation and the dead. What horrors seize the guilty soul Upon a dying bed!

(No wonder that Jacob Cochrane's lively songs, cheerful, hopeful, militant and bracing, fell with a pleasing sound upon the ear of the believer of that epoch.) The love of God had, indeed, entered Philip's soul, but in some mysterious way had been ossified after it got there. He had intensely black hair, dark skin and a liver that disposed him constitution-ally to an ardent belief in the necessity of hell for most of his neighbors and the hope of spending his own glorious immortality in a small, properly restricted and prudently managed heaven. He was eloquent at prayer meeting, and Patty's only objection to him there was in his disposi-tion to allude to himself as a "rebel worm," with frequent references to his "vile body." Otherwise and when not engaged in theological discussion Patty liked Philip very much. His own father, although an orthodox member of the fold in good and regular standing, had "doctored" Phil conscientiously for his liver from his youth up, hoping in time to incite in him a sunnier view of life, for the doctor was somewhat skilled in adapting his remedies to spiritual maladies. Jed Morrill had always said that when old Mrs. Buxton, the champion convert of Jacob Cochrane, was at her worstkeeping her whole family awake nights by her hysterical fears for their future-Dr. Perty had given her a twelfth of a grain of tartar emetic five times a day until she had entire mental relief, and her anxiety concerning the salvation of her husband and children was set completely at

The good doctor noted with secret pleasure his son's growing fondness for the society of his prime favorite, Miss Patience Baxter. "He'll begin by trying to save her soul," he thought. "Phil always begins that way, but when Patty gets him in hand he'll remember the existence of his heart, an organ he has never taken into consideration. A love affair with a pretty girl, good but not too pious, will help Phil considerable, however it turns out." There is no doubt but that Phil was taking his chances and that under Patty's tutelage he was growing mellower. As for Patty, she was only amusing herself and frisking like 2 young lamb in pastures where she had never strayed before. Her fancy flew from Mark to Phil and from Phil back to Mark again, for at the moment she was just a vessel of emotion, ready to empty herself on she knew not what Temperamentally, she would take advantage of currents rather than steer Misses Iva and Hazel Mulligan spent the holiday in Toronto.

She had fancied up to now that she could control, urge on or cool down a man's feeling forever and a day if she chose and remain mistress of the situation. Now, after some weeks of weighing and balancing her two swains, she found herself confronting a choice once and for all. Each of them seemed to be approaching the state of mind where he was likely to say, somewhat violently, "Take me or Take a glass of Salts if your Back leave me, one or the other!" But she did not wish to take them, and still less did she wish to leave them, with no other lover in sight but Cephas

Cole, who was almost, though not quite, worse than none. If matters by lack of masculine patience and self control did come to a crisis what should she say definitely to either of her suitors? Her father despised Mark Wilson a trifle more than any young man on the river, and while he could have no objection to sharp pains in the back or sick head-Phil Perry's character or position in ache, dizzines, your stomach sours, the world, his hatred of old Dr. Perry tongue is coated and when the weathamounted to a disease. Who could look in Waitstill's clear, steadfast eyes and sav. "I can't make up my mind which to marry?" Not Patty. She felt, instinctively, that Waitstill's heart, if we have seen, began with his allena. it moved at all, would rush out like a great river to lose itself in the ocean and, losing itself, forget the narrow church, and Ellen had proved so entirely lacking in the religious sense, the note of a child's penny flute and so self satisfied as to her standing with that Waitstill was perhaps vibrating secretly with a deeper, richer music than could ever come to her. Stil music of some sort she meant to feel. "Even if they make me decide one way or another before I am ready," she said to herself, "I'll never say 'yes' till Patty, though somewhat lacking in I'm more in love than I am now!"

There were other reasons why she trustworthy saints, was not, like Ellen, did not want to ask Waitstill's advice. wholly given over to the fleshpots and Not only did she shrink from the lov-

Now, if anything hap-pens, I can tell father that I did it all myself and that Waitstill knew nothing about it whatever. Then—oh, joy|if father is too terrible I shall be married woman and I can always say I will not permit such cruelty! Wait-still is dependent upon you no longer; she shall come at once to my husband and me!"

This latter phrase almost intoxicated Patty, so that there were moments when she could have run up to Milliken's mills and purchased hersel husband at any cost, had her sler savings permitted the best in the marker, and the more impersonal the hubband the more delightedly Patty rolled the phrase under her tongue.

"I can never be 'publishe church," she thought, "and perha body will ever care enough about home fether's displacement to brave father's displeasure and h sist on running away with me. I d wish somebody would care 'frightfull about me enough for that, enough help me make up my mind, so could just drive up to father's streeme day and say, 'Good afterno father! I knew you'd never let marry'"—there was always a dash here in Patty's imaginary discourses, a dash that could be filled in with any Christian name according to her moo of the moment—"'so I just married him anyway and you needn't be angr. with my sister, for she knew no about it. My husband and I are sorry if you are displeased, but there's no help for it, and my husband's home will always be open to Waitstill whatever happens.'"

Patty, with all ber latent love of finery and ease, did not weigh the worldly circumstances of the two men, though the reflection that she would have more amusement with Mark than with Philip may have crossed her mind. She trusted Philip and respect ed his steady going, serious view life. It pleased her vanity, too, to fe how her nonsense and fun lig his temperamental gravity, playing and out and over it like a but a smoke bush. She would be safe with Philip always, but safety had no special charm for one of her age, who had never been in peril. Mark's superior knowledge of the world, more his careless, buoyant manner of carry ing himself, his gay, boyish andacity all had a very distinct charm for herand vet-But there would be no "and yet" a little later. Patty's heart would blaze quickly enough when sufficient heat was applied to it and Mark was falling more and more deeply in love every day. As Patty vacillated his purpose strengthened, the more she weighed the more he ceased to weigh the difficulties of the situation, more he loved and the more he reected her. She began by delig his senses, she ended by winning all that there was in him and creating continually the qualities he lacked, after the manner of true women even when they are very young and foolish,
