CHAPTER XVI.

However, that was no business of the Griffin's.

"I wonder whether you know that my objection to Mr. Frayne as a husband for my niece is based on something more than the fact that I want her to marry your brother? I have heard the rumor that his father's affairs are involved."

"Mr. Percy Standish told you?" said Lady Alicia smoothly.

The Griffin stared at her. "You seem to know everything, my dear," she said. "How did you know that?"

"Does it matter?" asked Lady Alicia pleasantly. "Of course, I am going to work on that rumor—which, by the way, I believe to be quite accurate."

"Very well, my dear," said Aunt Gwen. "I shall leave myself entirely in your hands."

"Do you really mean that?" inquired Lady Alicia smilingly. "Would you be prepared to start for the Continent tomorrow morning, if it were necessary to do so? Lucerne is a very pretty place, and the change would do Miss Drayle good. Northam is very fond of Lucerne, and I would not be surprised if he ran over there presently."

"You are really a very clever girl, my dear," said Lady Gwen, admiringly. "We can start to-morrow quite easily. Why not?"

"It will not be necessary to say anything to Miss Drayle," intimated Alicia. "I mean until to-morrow. I will tell you to-night, when I am leaving, if it will be necessary for you to go."

When the Griffin had taken her departure the calmness and serenity of her fellow conspirator disappeared. Lady Alicia sank back, gazing before her into vacancy, her hands clenched, her face red and white by turns; her breath came in labored gasps, she looked as if she were going faint; she had nearly lost Darrel; even now she might lose him.

Lady Gwen went home, and, hearing that Cynthia was still in her room, climbed up to it. She knocked at the door with her stick, and presently Cynthia opened it.

At sight of her the Griffin almost started, for she had expected to see Cynthia with red and swollen eyes and tear-washed cheeks, but, though Cynthia's face was pale, her eyes were bright, and there was an expression of confidence and resolution which told the Griffin that Lady Alicia had not been wrong in her conjecture. It was evident that Cynthia was not crushed, that she was going to do something desperate.

"Oh, there you are!" said the old lady, with a conciliatory grunt. "I have come to tell you that I made rather a fool of myself downstairs just now; we both made fools of ourselves. I don't want to say any more about it, but my hark is worse than my bite, as you know. We'll talk it over later on."

Cynthia's face flushed, her eyes grew softer.

"ORANGE LILY SAVED MY LIFE"

These words or expressions having the same meaning are contained in hundreds of the letters I have received during the past year. Many were from women who had suffered agonies from falling of womb, others from women who had escaped dangerous surgical operations, as the tumors and ulcers had been removed by the action of Orange Lily; and others who had suffered from suppressed menstruation, leucorrhoea, painful periods, etc. For all these and the other troubles known in general as "Women's Disorders," Orange Lily furnishes a positive scientific, never-failing cure. He applied direct to the suffering organs, and its operation is certain and beneficial. As a trial actually proves its merit, I hereby offer to send absolutely free a box worth $2.00, sufficient for ten days' treatment, to every suffering woman who will write for it. Enclose 3 stamps. "Oh, Aunt Gwen—" she began gratefully, affectionately, but the Griffin waved her hand, as if to prevent further speech.

"No, no!" she said; "don't let us begin on it again; we shall only quarrel." She turned away, as Cynthia's face fell, and then said casually, "By the way, Lady Alicia lies here to-night; of course you will come down."

"Yes, I will come down," responded Cynthia, with a sigh.

When she descended to the drawing room, Lady Alicia had arrived. She greeted Cynthia in an ordinary tone of manner, giving no indication that she was aware of what was going on; they went in to dinner, and Lady Alicia was as bright as usual, and Lady Gwen, if not exactly affectionate with Cynthia, treated her with a graciousness which seemed to imply that she had regretted her harshness. Cynthia was almost silent during the dinner, and scarcely listened to the other two, for she was thinking of the morrow and all it meant to her; every now and then a tremor ran through her, her face flushed, her eyes grew heavy; was it really true that she was going to be married to Darrel to-morrow morning?

They went into the drawing room, and after a few minutes Lady Gwen leaned back in her chair and closed her eyes. Lady Alicia glanced at her and then smiled at Cynthia.

"Let us go into the conservatory; we shall disturb her if we talk here," she whispered.

There were some comfortable chairs in the palm house, and Lady Alicia reclined in one, and patted another beside her invitingly.

"How well these things grow," she said; "they do better here than at Torbridge. Speaking of Torbridge reminds me, Cynthia—you don't mind me calling you Cynthia?—that I want to tell you that I am sorry you and I are not going to be more than friends. Poor Northam! He is wonderfully cut up. He is not the sort of man to wear his heart on his sleeve. But, of course, I know how deeply he feels your refusal. All the same, I am sure you are quite right, dear. Of all the foolish things men do, and we women, too, there is nothing so idiotic as marrying a person for whom you do not care."

Cynthia glanced at her shyly and with some surprise; she had not expected to hear such a sentiment from Lady Alicia's lips.

"Yes, you did quite right," continued Lady Alicia. "There is only one thing that is more idiotic, and that is for a girl to marry an absolutely poor man."

"Not if she loved him," murmured Cynthia.

"My dear, that only makes it worse," retorted Lady Alicia, with a laugh. "because, don't you see, she suffers all the more keenly for the ruin she has brought upon him."

"Ruin—she has brought upon him?" repeated Cynthia, turning her innocent eyes upon her companion.

"Why, certainly," said Lady Alicia, raising her brows. "It's bad enough for a man to be poor when he's single; but it's infinitely worse, it's a hell upon earth, for him when he is hampered with a wife and children, especially when he cares for the girl, because he knows that he has dragged her down."

"I see," said Cynthia thoughtfully. The argument had no personal interest for her, for Darrel would be rich; a throb of gratitude to Providence stirred her heart at the thought.

Lady Alicia settled herself still more comfortably in the deck chair.

"I am always so sorry for poor young men, especially when they belong to our class," she said, with a little yawn, as if she were pursuing the subject merely to pass the time; "there they are, awfully good fellows, just the kind of men one would like to marry; but, of course, they are quite impossible. Now, take our mutual friend, Mr. Frayne, for instance!"

Cynthia started, her face was suffused by a blush, but Alicia's eyes were half closed, and she did not appear to notice these signs of her companion's emotion—"he is one of the most charming of men—awfully good-looking, and in our own class. There must be any number of girls who would marry him out of hand if it were not for his circumstances."

The color faded from Cynthia's face, her brows came together with a perplexed frown, she gazed at Alicia with surprise, incredulity; but the blue eyes were closed, their owner seemed half asleep.

"What—what circumstances; what do you mean?" asked Cynthia.

"Oh, well, perhaps I ought not to speak about Mr. Frayne's private affairs," said Lady Alicia apologetically, "especially as I became acquainted with them by a kind of accident. His father's estates are terribly encumbered—in fact, it is a wonder they can carry on. It is always a mystery to me how people in their position find the ready money which they appear to possess. Poor Mr. Frayne! If his father died he would be left absolutely penniless, or something like it."

Cynthia's eyes opened wider; she was startled and amazed. The great Sir Anson, the king of Summerisle's poor! Her Darrel penniless!

"I—I don't think that's true," she said in a low voice.

"Absolutely true, you may depend upon it," said Alicia, with another little yawn. "My authority is unimpeachable. I am rather nervous about Mr. Frayne; he is so young and impulsive. He is a great friend of Northam's, you know, and I have seen a great deal of him lately, and quite like him; and, as I say, he gets on my nerves. I mean, that he is just the sort of man to fall in love with some penniless girl and marry her. Love in a cottage and that kind of thing, you know. It would mean ruin, of course; he had far better buy a revolver and shoot himself, and shoot her into the bargain. Fancy Darrel Frayne, whom we have all made a kind of pet of, who has always had plenty of money and done what he liked, dragged down by a wife and children and living from hand to mouth, with the prospect of a work-house before him!"

Cynthia was very pale now, her breath labored, a cold hand seemed to grasp her heart.

"Are you—sure?" she asked, almost inaudibly.

"Quite sure," said Lady Alicia, in a tone that implied that she was beginning to lose interest in the subject. "I dare say he doesn't know how he stands. It is very probable that his father does not realize the fix he is in; but I am absolutely certain that I am right in saying that they are quite ruined. Of course, while he remains unmarried, Mr. Frayne has a chance of recovering his footing. He is young and strong, and has all the world before him. There are heaps of things a man can do—if he is not hampered by a wife. If I were in love with him I would rather cut my hand off than let him marry me."

The Experience of Two Girls Here Related For The Benefit of Others.

Rochester, N. Y.—"I have a daughter 13 years old who has always been very healthy until recently when she complained of dizziness and cramps every month, so bad that I would have to keep her home from school and put her to bed to get relief."

"After giving her only two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and before I had taken the whole of two bottles I found relief. I am only sixteen years old, but I have better health than for two or three years. I cannot express my thanks for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I had taken other medicines but did not find relief."—Miss CORA B. FOSNAUGE, Stearnsville, Ohio, R.F.D., No. 1.

This emphatic assertion was broken by a strange sound from Cynthia. It was not a cry nor a sob; it was the inarticulate moan of a soul in agony. She had risen and was standing wringing her hands, her face averted. Lady Alicia leaned forward and looked at her with a fine assumption of astonishment and alarm.

"My dear Cynthia! What is the matter?" she exclaimed.

For a moment or two Cynthia seemed incapable of speech. The blow had been struck so suddenly, so heavily, that she was stunned, bewildered, but not too stunned and bewildered to realize the injury she had been going to inflict, all unwittingly, on her beloved.

"What is the matter?" repeated Lady Alicia, and now her tone was full of sympathy, of affected tenderness. "Have I said anything? Won't you tell me, Cynthia? Oh! I wish you would treat me as a friend! I've grown quite fond of you. Pray, tell me if I have said anything to wound you?"

Cynthia faced round upon her, tortured by the sudden anguish which demands expression.

"I was going to marry Darrel to-morrow," she said, scarcely knowing what she said.

Lady Alicia caught her hand; there was something almost savage, ferocious, in her grasp.

"You—were—going—to—marry—" him!" she exclaimed, fighting for breath. "Oh, I am sorry! I didn't know, I didn't guess. I would not have told you."

"It doesn't matter," said Cynthia, her bosom heaving, her lips set, her brows drawn together. "It is better that I should know before it was too late. I—I should have ruined him. I am quite poor; I have no money; Aunt Gwen would throw me off. I should drag him down. I won't do that—for I love him, oh, I love him!"

"My poor Cynthia!" murmured Lady Alicia. Her own heart was beating fast; there was a gleam of anticipatory triumph in the steel-blue eyes. "Perhaps after all, if you love him and he loves you—"

Cynthia winced, but she shook her head, and a dull, despairing look came into her eyes.

"No, no!" she said. "It is quite true what you say. I remember something Aunt Gwen said. She said Sir Anson was impecunious. I should be a drag on him. But I shall not see him until to-morrow!"

Lady Alicia laughed softly, sympathetically.

"And he would laugh at your prudence. He would persuade you that you are wrong. You won't be able to resist, and you will be married; and really I shouldn't blame him or you. You see, you are so beautiful, my dear, and he is very much in love with you."

9526.—A PRACTICAL DRESS FOR SCHOOL OR GENERAL WEAR.

Girls' Dresses With Chemise, and with Long or Shorter Sleeve.

The popularity and good sense of a front closing is as apparent on dresses for young girls as on those for their elders. The model here shown carries this desirable feature, and has many other good points. The deep cut fronts outline a chemise, that may be made of lawn, or other contrasting material. The neck edge is finished with a pretty collar. The sleeve may be long with a band cuff, or finished in elbow length. The skirt is gored. The Pattern, suitable for gaiters, gingham, chambray, percale, cordeline, linen and other seasonable fabrics, is cut in 4 sizes: 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. It requires 3 yards of 36 inch material for an 8 year size. A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 10c. in silver or stamps.

9526-9546.—AN ATTRACTIVE HOME OR CALLING GOWN.

White linen with white net for the chemise, and blue collar and piping, which lends itself charmingly to gingham, voile, corduroy, silk or serge. The skirt is unique in its shaping, simulating a tunic over the front, and crossing the back in a deep fold. The waist is finished with a tab extension at the side front, and opens over a chemise that may be of self or contrasting material, preferable of net, lace or embroidery. The design is composed of Ladies' Blouse Waist, 9552, cut in 6 sizes: 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure. The Skirt is from pattern 9546, cut in 5 sizes: 22, 24, 26, 28, and 30 inches waist measure. The entire dress requires 7 yards of 36 inch material for a 36 inch size.

This illustration calls for TWO separate patterns which will be mailed to any address on receipt of 10c. FOR EACH pattern in silver or stamps.
