last night, said in part, according to a Reuter despatch from Petrograd: Between us and Germany a great gulf is fixed, red with the blood of peace Germany have been defeated and the spirit of militarism permeating the whole nation exercised. During the past two years Britain has more than once been accused not only of wishing o secure the lion's share of the spoils. but of thwarting the realization of Russia's traditional ambitions. Prem ier Trepoff's recent statement in the Duma laid that bogey to rest forever. The British Government when first approached on the subject of Constantinople and the Straits early in the spring of 1915 immediately expressed its whole-hearted assent. We want to see Russia largely compensated for all her services and sacrifices. We want to help her to the prize she has so long dreamed of. We want to see her strong and prosperous. We want to consolidate for all time the alliance which this war has cemented, for upon its maintenance depends the future peace of the world. That is the corner stone of our policy. Sir George in the course of his speech said that Britain during the war advanced more than 600,000,000 pounds sterling to her Allies for the purchase of war material, which otherwise they would have been unable
