In the Realms of Sport.

It's fine to be a slugger great. And slam the ball upon the seam; And know that when you hug the plate The ladies all will cheer and beam. It's great to come up in the pinch And hear the roaring fans commence Because they know it is a cinch For you to bust the outfield fence.

A slugger's life is great, I wot. Just gaze on Chris with all the fame! He bumps the pill outside the lot And then gets cheered by every dame. He ambles up with manner grand, While bleacher nuts say "Ain't he swell!" And when he poles one in the stand, O! baby! How they scream and yell.

A rip-roaring double header is on the carpet to-night for the Mount Cashel trophy. The first clash is between the Lions and the Wanderers, and if the latter show up as well as they did the other evening then the champs will have their work out to vanquish them. Likewise the meet between the B.S. and Cubs promises to be anything but one-sided as each club wants the honour and glory next Wednesday afternoon of playing before the assembled thousands.

Players and fans are reminded that Wedding Bells.

A very pretty wedding took place at St. Mary's Church on the 19th inst., when Agnes Alcock was united in the bonds of matrimony to George Fowlow. The bride, carrying a bunch of white carnations and maiden-hair fern, looked charming in a dress of peach crepe de chine with hat to match, and entered the church, where a large concourse of friends had assembled, on the arm of Mr. K. Carter, who acted as father-giver. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. A. B. Stirling. The bride was attended by Misses F. Priddle and M. Fowlow, who looked very pretty in their respective attire. The groom was assisted by Mr. Harvey Skirving who performed his duties to perfection. After the ceremony in the church, the newly married couple were entertained at a reception at the West End Restaurant where a bountiful spread was partaken of by the immediate friends of the bride and groom. The bride was the recipient of many valuable and useful presents which testified to the esteem in which she is held. The happy couple went out by to-day's express enroute to Trinity where the honeymoon will be spent, after which they will return to the city and will reside on Springdale Street. We wish Mr. and Mrs. Fowlow a bon voyage over the sea of matrimony.

The Inventor of the Revolver.

On Monday, July 19, 1814, Samuel Colt, who invented the revolver, was born at Hartford, in Connecticut, in the United States. One of the principal establishments of that city is still Colt's Firearms Company, though he himself died on January 9, 1862. To call it an invention is, perhaps, not strictly correct, for an eight-chamber pistol dating from the sixteenth century is preserved in the Royal Artillery Museum at Woolwich. Pistols themselves had been used in England since 1544 being so named from Pistola, now called Pistol, a town in Italy, the place of their invention. Colt's weapon was practical, however, and led the British Government in 1855 to establish the Royal Small Arms Factory at Enfield, near London, whence the famous Enfield rifle derived its name. At ten years old Samuel Colt left school to work in his father's silk and woollen manufactory; but at fourteen he made a runaway voyage to India, during which he constructed a wooden model, which still exists, of his future revolver. After returning home he saved all his earnings to devote to his purpose, and in 1835 patented his invention in Europe. Returning again to his birthplace, he overcame various difficulties and discouragements, and founded in 1852 the enormous factory which stands to-day, and which has produced many millions of revolvers.

TO-DAY'S MESSAGES.

TRANS-PACIFIC FLIGHT.

LONDON, July 20.
Major C. W. F. Morgan, British aviator, has cabled to United States his decision to attempt a transpacific flight from 'Frisco to Sydney, N.S.W., for the prize of ten thousand pounds offered by Thos. Ince, Los Angeles. He plans to leave 'Frisco on the evening of Oct. 2, and to arrive at Sydney on the seventh. Morgan was with Raynham in an unsuccessful attempt of a flight from Newfoundland to Ireland in May 1919, when their Martinside plane was wrecked.

OUR SEARCHOLOGIST AT OTTAWA.

OTTAWA, July 20.
Sir Patrick McGrath is in the city in connection with the Labrador-Ungava Border Line, and will go to London on further investigation. He understands the case will not go before the Privy Council for a year. He also said that Armstrong, Whitworth and the Reid's pulp and paper project, if successful, will solve the Colony's industrial problems.

TAKING THEM IN.

LONDON, July 20.
For the first time a former enemy state was permitted a seat in the Council of League of Nations, when Hungary's representative stated boundary claims against Jugoslayia and Austria. Officials foreshadow a similar privilege for Germany.

BY FORCE OF ARMS.

DUBLIN, July 20.
An official statement says the National Army Forces control twelve counties, while insurgents hold Donegal, Sligo, Galway, Limerick, Tipperary, Waterford, Cork and Mayo. It also says that in these counties the people overwhelmingly favor the Treaty but irregulars rule by a authority of armed force.

DOWAGER OF DENMARK ILL.

COPENHAGEN, July 20.
Dowager Queen Louise of Denmark is seriously ill of pneumonia and said to be dying.

TURNING DOWN RUSSIA.

THE HAGUE, July 20.
Non-Russian delegates at the conference turned down Livinoff's proposals, and decided to snuff them out of the conference to-day with a formal presentation from the sub-committee on credits, debts and foreign property confiscated in Russia.

ONE STATE REFUSES.

WASHINGTON, July 20.
Replies from twenty state executives show all but the Governor of North Carolina ready to aid the President in persuading miners to return to work.

The Child Welfare Association.

What is the object of the Child Welfare Association? In a few words—to keep well children well, to restore the sick children to health.

Next week we are holding a health conference, a conference of mothers and doctors. Mothers are bringing their children to the Conference to be examined by the medical men of the city, to find how they measure up to the standard of a healthy child.

They will be shown how they fall short of that standard and what they can do to improve them.

"Every community can determine its own death rate."

What is meant by the infant death rate? The infant death rate is the number of deaths under one year out of every thousand children born alive. Last year the infant death rate in St. John's was 131.57, that is to say, out of every thousand children born alive, one hundred and thirty-one were dead before they had lived a year. In New Zealand the death rate is 68. Why not "determine" that ours shall be no more than that? When the late King Edward was told that consumption was preventable he said, "Then why not prevent it?" If half these children can be saved, then why not save them? This is the work the community nurses are trying to do as they go their daily round. St. John's is not an easy city for district work, the roads are bad, the hills steep to climb, the weather in winter often very stormy. The nurses go from the Battery to Waterford Bridge Rd. from the Southside to Blackmarsh Rd. alone to see sixty families on Blackmarsh Rd. alone to be visited. The cars do not help very much and boots and rubbers need to be often replenished. But their work is being appreciated more and more every day.

We need another nurse, a trained public health nurse, but before we engage we must see our way clear to pay her salary.

The work of the Child Welfare Association is capable of being developed along many lines, but is sadly limited for want of money. We have to raise $1,200 yearly as our contribution towards nurses' salaries alone. We have three milk stations to support. The milk supplied very nearly pays for itself, but we have to pay rent, attendants' salaries and other expenses.

A hospital for sick children is badly needed.

"Every community can determine its own death rate."

What Your Face Reveals.

Is it generally appreciated that a substantial proportion of almost every day consists of idle moments? To those who live continuously crowded hours, idle moments suggest a luxury, but to the majority the question of filling blank periods of varying lengths arise not infrequently.

There are few more fascinating ways of occupying idle moments than in the study of men and women. At the outset it is necessary to fix in the mind certain standards, so that comparisons may be made. With this object in view, the following distinctive types of features are indicated, but it will be realized that in no case are they exhaustive.

Brown Eyes Show Cleverness.
To take the head, there may be noted:

The small head associated usually with a lack of capacity.

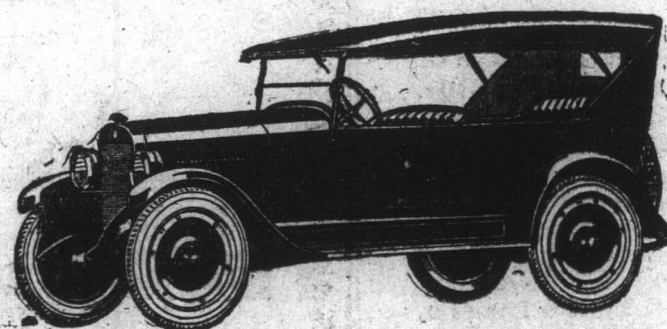

Heads of unusual magnitude—such, for example, as that of Mr. Lloyd George—indicating great force of character.

The criminal head, with its narrowness, low forehead, and low position of the ears, as seen in the photographs of criminals or in the Chamber of Horrors at Madame Tussaud's.

The high forehead, denoting talent and considerable intellectual capacity.

Amongst other types, may be noted those where the top of the head is rounded, indicating benevolence and religious feeling, whilst a tendency to general roundness shows "will-power, firmness, or obstinacy."

Then to take the eyes. As indicators of character the eyes are invaluable, though not an infallible guide.

Blue eyes generally denote gentleness and serenity, of lack of determination and little business capacity. Grey eyes indicate liveliness, a poetic temperament, impressionability, earnestness, and magnetism.

Brown eyes are very pleasant, and show affection, courage, and cleverness. Green eyes are associated with the "green-eyed monster," jealousy, but they indicate cleverness. Black eyes are not usually trusted, and often the villain of the piece possesses black eyes and a bold glance.

The various distinct types of noses are:

The prominent aquiline Roman nose, supposed to show energy, decision, firmness, and a certain absence of refinement.

The straight Grecian nose, indicating refinement, love of arts, and astuteness.

The cogitative nose, with its wide nostrils, indicating considerable powers of thought.

The rather thin and sharp Jewish nose, denoting shrewdness in worldly matters.

Volges That Betray. Perhaps the human voice affords the most fascinating study. It reveals the quality of mind and character more readily than any other feature.

Yet it should be remembered that greatness and quality are not always apparent in conversation, for Garrick said of Oliver Goldsmith: "Here lies Nolly Goldsmith, for whom I wrote like an angel, but talked like poor Poll."

The various types of voices—the coarse, hoarse, piercing, clear, sharp, trembling, hesitating, strong and the grave, to the soft and sweet—need hardly be mentioned in detail, since most have acquired a habit of judging friends and acquaintances by their voices.
