A Lost Gem

Before the afternoon ended, however Miss Jacky came to the conclusion that Stella had not been mistaken. People seemed to see things in the same light as she did, and called to ask after her. Mrs. Lyndsay, who lived in another great house in the Perth Road, came with her two daughters; and old Mrs. Balsilly, who had been the bosom friend of Stella's grandmother, dropped in and stayed for an hour. Aunt Jacky had never yet been loath to drink a surreptitious cup of tea at any hour of the day or night; and she was only too glad to bustle about and order the servants, with great accession of dignity, to bring in afternoon tea soon after three o'clock. So that, when Mr. Hannington did make his appearance, in his leisurely London way, a little before the stroke of five, the teapot was cold, the cups and saucers stood here and there, and the room had the distracted appearance of one in which some half-dozen people had been moving and talking and drinking tea nearly all the afternoon.

Miss Jacky was inclined to apologize for the disorder, but Stella was not sorry for it. Looking at the room through Hannington's eyes, she again became conscious of its gorgeous ugliness. There was too much of everything, too much gilding, too much marble, too much satin brocade, too many exotic bowers. The whole thing was overdone. To Stella the only really pleasing parts of the room were the grand piano recently ordered for her from Germany, and the broad plate-glass windows, with their magnificent view of the Tay. She was glad that Hannington commented at once on the grand sweep of the river between its picturesque hills and wooded banks, and turned his back on the flaunting splendor of the Thornbank drawing room.

The call was short and rather formal; but it ended in an invitation to dinner, which Miss Jacky was as proud to be able to give as Mr. Hannington was to accept. In two days time he was to come, and as he gracefully expressed it, he would have the pleasure of making further acquaintance with Mr. Raeburn. Not with Stella; oh dear no!

Miss Jacky must be held responsible for a good deal. She had been exceedingly pleased when Mrs. Lyndsay had called, for the Lyndsays were great people in the commercial world; and she could not help letting out her pleasure with a certain arrangement in which Stella had been concerned.

"So kind of them, you know, Mr. Hannington," she said, simply, while Stella blushed hotly and wished to go out with her finger over her aunt's mouth. "For I'm sure I said to myself, what's your name? I mean Stella in this case—but a poor, wee lassie that's just come home from school, and must wait while before she makes friends with her neighbors! Wait awhile! Not she! She hadn't been home a day before Mrs. Lyndsay and her two girls came to call for her."

"To go out with them?" said Hannington, who did not quite understand. Miss Jacky did not see where he had misunderstood her. She did not remember at the moment that the Southern says "call on" where the Northerner says "call for," and she wondered a little at the drift of his question.

"Not to-day," she said; "they just called for her to-day out of pure friendliness, so to speak; but to-morrow she is to go out with them for the afternoon if it is a fine day, because Stella said that she has never seen Balmerino. Mr. Hannington; and they are to make a party and drive her over, because you know Balmerino is a place that ought to be seen."

"Is it really?" said the young man, with great apparent earnestness. "I ought to go myself, ought I not? I must get Donald Vereker to take me. I have often heard of the place, and meant to see it."

"Ay, and so you should," Miss Jacky assented, "and, if Mr. Vereker of the Castle goes with you, you'll want no introduction; but, as a rule, the keys are kept at the farm house, and the good man does not trust them into everybody's hands. I hope you'll have a fine afternoon to-morrow, Stella my dear."

"I hope so too," said Hannington, looking at her. Her eyes were downcast; there was the loveliest flush on her delicate cheeks. Hannington smiled. "Did she tell her aunt to let me know?" he said. "I'm sure she will."

"Women do these things sometimes. She is not very skillful at setting traps as yet, poor little thing. I won't fail her, however; I'll be at Balmerino to-morrow, too!"

The resolution showed how little he understood the motives that actuated Stella Raeburn.

CHAPTER IV.

Mr. Raeburn came home to his six o'clock dinner with the most lovely little watch in his pocket that Stella had ever beheld. He did not produce it until dessert was on the table, and then he brought it out in his dainty morocco case with great form and ceremony, and handed it to Stella on a dish, as if it were something good to eat.

"There, young lady!" he said. "There's a watch that is worth looking at. Don't let me see that trumpery silver affair again. It annoys me that you should wear a shoddy thing like that when I can afford you as good a one as any lady in the land."

"Dear papa, you are so kind," cried Stella. She could not resist the impulse to fly to his side and kiss him, although she noticed that he seemed a little taken aback by her effusive display of affection. "I shall always wear this one, but I shall keep the other too, and I shall be just as fond of it in my own heart, because you gave it to me yourself."

"There, there!" said Mr. Raeburn. "You haven't looked at it yet. Sit down, my dear, I chose that because of the device on the back. It's just a wee bit fanciful, I'll grant; but girls don't dislike a thing on that account."

The device was that of a star in brilliants, with a rather large diamond in the center. Stella and her aunt admired it extremely, but another surprise was still in store for them. Mr. Raeburn watched them silently the worn, haggard looking back to his face as he sat back in his chair and listened to their comments. Presently he smiled, and drew out two more cases, at which Stella gazed in surprise and Miss Jacky in consternation.

"Can't give one thing to you and nothing to your aunt, can I?" he said, appealing to Stella. "Hand that over to her, my dear. Something for you to wear at the next big dinner party we go to, Jacky. And that's for you, my dear, and the more of that sort you get the better."

Aunt Jacky's present was a diamond brooch; Stella's a gold bracelet studded with diamond stars. The girl's thanks were diamant and hearty; but she felt a little oppressed by the very magnificence of the gift. She had sense enough to know that so young a girl as herself ought not to wear diamonds, but she feared to wound her father's feelings by saying so. She slipped the bracelet on her fair, round arm, therefore, and gave herself up to a girlish pleasure in the flashing of the jewels in the lamplight. Miss Jacky looked less pleased than she did.

"They must have cost a great deal, Matthew," she said, after a rather awkward pause.

"And what if they did? Don't you suppose I can afford it?" said Mr. Raeburn, frowning at her angrily. "I can buy any one of those millionaires—a fellow like you, I'm a millionaire's going up; I mean to be as rich as Rothschild one of these days. There is no limit—no limit—to which I cannot aspire and attain. We'll make our Stella a princess yet. There is an old story about a Princess Fair-star in some silly book; we'll make our Princess Fair-star a millionaire. That'll be a new ending for a fairy tale."

He laughed harshly and rose from the table, regardless of the fact that the ladies had not made a move. Miss Jacky watched him darkly as he left the room. She could not understand the changes of his moods. He behaved as if he had been drinking. And yet—she had not noticed that he took larger quantities of wine than usual at dinner. There was something about him that made her feel very anxious and then, she turned to Stella; but Stella, though rather puzzled, had not sufficient experience either of her father or of the world at large to be alarmed. She was anything but critical by nature; and her father had shown himself loving and kind to her. That was sufficient to blind her eyes to his defects.

Besides, Stella had her own affairs to think about. Some instinct told her that Mr. Hannington intended to be at Balmerino on the following afternoon; he had not said so, but he looked his intention, and Stella had understood. She was half charmed, half frightened at the prospect. He had no business to go to the fine old ruin just for the sake of meeting her, and yet—if he chose to go, who could prevent him? She certainly could not. And then her thoughts resolved themselves into an intense anxiety about the weather. She sat at the delightful Blunier Grand for a good part of the evening, singing and playing Scottish airs for her father and her aunt; but her heart was not altogether in her music. It had flown far away from the present into a golden dream of future love and happiness.

The next day was cloudlessly fine. Mrs. Lyndsay and her girls—two rosy, merry lasses, who had a boundless admiration for their old friend Stella, with whom they used to go to school before she left Dundee for Russell—called at Thornbank at half-past one, and drove with her to the steamer in which the whole party—horses and carriages included—would be transported from Dundee to the Kingdom of Fife. At Newport they would get into the carriage again and be driven westward to the fine old Abbey ruin at Balmerino.

THE OCEAN GRAVEYARD.

OTTAWA, March 28.—According to the report received at the Marine Department from the captain of the Government steamer Newfield, it appears that the present population of Sable Island is 37. During the past year 51 ponies have been shipped from this ocean graveyard, and 32 barrels of cranberries, these representing the total export; 120 bushels of potatoes were raised on the island. An effort was made to grow some cereals, but grasshoppers and drought killed off the bulk of these crops. Foxes are increasing in great numbers on the island. The carrier pigeon service is being gradually perfected, twelve birds being now in course of training.

NOW IT'S ROTHSCHILDS.

The Diamond Swindler in Court—A Much-Needed Individual.

TORONTO, March 28.—A Rothschild, alias T. Hutton, the diamond swindler, arrested in St. Marys on Saturday last, appeared in the police court this morning. No evidence was offered, however, and the prisoner was again released, at the request of the crown. F. J. Dodge, a private detective, representing the Wells-Fargo Express Company, arrived in the city to initiate proceedings before Judge McDougall for the extradition of the prisoner. It is understood that the crown will drop the charges against Hutton at this point if he will consent to extradition.

THE WAY OF THE TRANSGRESSOR.

Severe Sentences Imposed by Judge McDougall at Toronto.

TORONTO, March 28.—This morning at the Court of General Sessions Judge McDougall sentenced the prisoners who had been found guilty of charges laid against them. The following were among the sentences meted out:

Ambrose M. C. Tiernan, counterfeiting, ten years in Kingston.

Richard Lewis, guilty of shooting Thomas Martin last Christmas, five years in Kingston.

Edward Rowland, for stealing oats, three years in Kingston.

Nelson and Thomas Rowland, brother of the former, two years in Kingston.

Thos. McConkey, for firing his boarding house, two years in Kingston.

John McGonaghy, stealing a gun, two years at the Central Prison.

The mother of the prisoner McGonaghy was in the court room, and broke down when her son received his sentence.

FISH STORY FROM KENTUCKY.

Large Revolver Was Found in a Fish's Stomach.

LEXINGTON, Ky., March 28.—Edward Wickliffe this morning received a yellow salmon from Foreman's grocery. Foreman telephoned him that the seven pound fish that he had selected had a revolver in its stomach. Mr. Wickliffe went to the grocery, and found that the negro, in cleaning the fish, cut it open, and discovered in its stomach a large-sized, old-fashioned Colt's revolver. The wooden handle was entirely rotted away, leaving the steel frame-work. The hammer was practically gone, as was the trigger and trigger guard. The ramrod had disappeared, leaving nothing but the barrel, which is seven inches long, the cylinder and the frame work. The fish was shipped here frozen from Lake Michigan.

Dews are less abundant on islands and on ships in midocean. Seamen nearing land can tell that fact by reason of the deposits of dew on the vessel.

It's the Standard Fashion, in washing and cleaning, to use Pearline. Certainly the enormous amount of it used every year proves it. Millions of women use nothing else.

And when you see a fashion so universal, so sensible, and so unchangeable, why not adopt it? There are many things that try to imitate Pearline. Some of them may be more or less successful for a while—but the public is learning. "You can't fool all the people all the time"—and the women who want the best thing to wash with, one that is absolutely safe, will continue to use Pearline—made by James Pyle, N. Y.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoria, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Fitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Fitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fitcher is on every wrapper.
