THE EVENING STORM.

First a murmuring, then a muttering, Next a rumbling growing stronger; Hark to storm is brewing, uttering Mighty hosts are moving yonder, Blineing flashes follow after, Crackling, crashing, booming Thunder Bellows out his awful laughter. Grander sight than this has Nature No. in all her realms so fair; 'Tis not a dark and threatening picture, God, the Father,'s ruling there. —FALCON.

LONDON AND ENVIRONS.

-When skies were blue and all was bright, And soft and balmy was the weather, On shining cycles, swift and light, sweet Maud and I rode out together.

"If we," quoth I, "could side by side Ride thus along life's path, at random." she bent her head, then blushed and said, "I think I should prefer a tandem."
