Then the shop girls, who had seen th whole thing, turned their vials of wrath on hat young man, and how they did make him suffer! First they all shricked 'Shame! in chorus at him for striking at an old man, then they began to pull him to pieces. They began at his hat and minutely dissected his wearing apparel, making savage sarcasms. They ridiculed to each other his collar, his necktie, the fit of his clothes, the size of his feet, the shape of his nose, the expanse of his mouth and the color in his face, which grew fast from pink to scarlet and then purple under the tongue lashing he was getting. They edged their emarks with a ready wit, and at every ally the passengers roared. The castigs ion began at Ninth street. When the train reached Twenty-third street the oung man's face was about ready to burst to flame and he could stand no more of it. He incontinently fled for the door. Then everybody applauded, but the girls only looked in a satisfied way at each other for a moment and calmly resumed their

for the Ludies.

Two Examples of Women's Ways of Making a Living.

An energetic woman is never at a los or a means of livelihood when thrown men in this city are engaged in business, and many of them are in direct and suc cessful competition with men. Female pread-winners of originality have developed for themselves new fields of labor, and, says the Philadelphia Inquirer, they sually make them pay. One bright woman, who was left destitute by the death of her husband, with several small death of her husband, with several small children dependant upon her, remembered, after trying to decide what to do, that she possessed a recipe that had been handed down to her from an old-fashioned New England ancestor for making a superior quality of doughnuts. She interviewed a prominent grocer and made a proposition to him to sell the product of her housewifely skill. The result was that a few days later the grocer's front window was filled with a batch of the crisp, brown pastry and a sign informed the passer-by that the old-fashioned doughnuts could be purchased within for fifteen cents a dozen. The first day there were purchased enough to exhaust the supply, and since that time the doughnut trade has steadily increased, until to-day several cooks, under the little word of the could be purchased subject to the could be considered as the could be considered as the could be completed until to-day several cooks, under the little woman's superintendance, are kept constantly busy, and her income from the
