

CHAPTER XXXII.

Sister M. de Chantal.—Deaths.—A broken arm.—“A boy that will not be good.”—The Chaplaincy difficulties.—Letters.—Dean Meyler.—“Christ’s Blessed Cross.”—The Limerick Foundation.—Death of Sister M. Teresa Potter.—Letter of condolence..... 331

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Sister M. Gertrude Jones.—She shows her brightest colors in dying.—Death of Robert McAuley.—The English Sisters.—National pride.—“Geraldine.”—The last glimpse of Erin.—Visit to Newry.—Departure of the Foundress for the London mission..... 345

CHAPTER XXXIV.

General government.—Lady Barbara Eyre.—Her Reception.—The Court Fri-seur.—An amusing incident.—Gratitude of the Foundress.—Letters..... 355

CHAPTER XXXV.

Galway.—“A second Mary Teresa.”—The English Sisters.—The Laundry.—Dr. Griffiths entreats more aid for Bermondsey.—Reception of the Sisters for the Birmingham Foundation.—Reception in Galway.—Difficulties.—Very Rev. Peter Daly..... 367

CHAPTER XXXVI.

The Apostle of Temperance and the Sister of Mercy.—A Howard among the Teetotalers.—Birr.—Worse feuds than the “O’Carroll Feuds.”—The Apostle’s expedient.—The Crottyites.—Mother McAuley on the progress of Temperance.—Letters from Birr.—Conversion of Rev. Mr. Crotty.—“The sun shines too brightly” for the Foundress..... 377

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Fresh objections to the Institute.—Reverend Mother appeals to Rome.—Letter.—She loses the last of her “earthly joys.”—Her warm attachment to her relatives.—The Naas Convent.—A severe letter.—O’Connell’s speech at Carrick-on-Suir.—The Wexford Convent.—A spoiled vocation..... 389

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

Declining health of the Foundress.—The English Sisters.—Letter of the Bishop of Birmingham.—Bishop Wiseman.—The Bishop of Liverpool.—Miss G——, of Eaton House.—Renewal of the Liverpool negotiations.—Letter of Dr. Youens.—Dr. Pusey.—Confirmation of the Rule.—The Birmingham Foundation..... 393