"TROOLY-LOIL."

HE Ontario Readers are a great im-Provement on the old Canadian Series. We say this at the outset, lest we should be misunderstood. The compilers have evinced great care and good judgment in making the selections. They truly say in the preface to the Fourth Reader, that "the selections in prose and verse are poetic gems, whose lustre and value time will never lessen." It is precisely about one of these gems, a favorite of ours, that we wish to say a few

Every one is familiar with Burns' "A man's a man for a' that." One stanza is the following:—

Ye see yon birkie ca'd a lord. Wha struts and stores and a' that, Tho' hundreds worship at his word, He's but a coof for a' that. For a' that and a' that,

His ribband, star and a' that. The man of independent mind, He looks and laughs at a' that.

We always thought that this was at least Indeed, we confess, we adharmless. mired the sentiment expressed therein. We should not object to having our children (if we had any), learn to look on toadyism with contempt. But the Arguseyed compilers saw treason in the verse and decided that it must go. And it went! Not because the selection would have been too long, for there are only five such stanzas in all. Laugh at a lord! Oh no! The youth of Ontario must be saved from such rank radicalism. Perhaps the unsophisticated innocents might think it inconsistent to endorse this gem in one lesson and in the next to eulogize "the greatest emanation of human wisdom" under which lords have a hereditary right to legislate. A lord may be a "coof" and hundreds may "worship at his word," but they are not to be laughed at.

Who could say where the evil influence of the expunged stanza might have stopped? It might, oh horror! it might have lessened the reverence for our Governors-General.

"C'EST ANGLALS."

HE French-Canadians just now come in for a great deal of consideration with many politicians and political writers. Indeed this has been more or less the case since Confederation. Grits and Tories alike have taken their turn in abusing them. "A menace to
