

MORALS AND LITERATURE.

The day was, when the startling realism of the Brontë sisters (to put it mildly) met with the sternest censure and fiercest ostracism of right thinking people. Dr. Brownson goes the length of declaring that "there are passages in 'Jane Eyre' which show that women can enter into, and describe with minute accuracy, the grossest passions of man's nature, which men could not describe to their own sex without a blush." And yet, in her biography of its author, Mrs. Gaskill would have us believe that when Charlotte Brontë violated convention (again, to put it mildly) she did so unwittingly; and that the daring utterances of the Yorkshire curate's daughters were simply the innocent expression of morbid temperaments acted on by exceptional environments. Apologists have also been found for the agnostic sophisms and psychological subtleties of Mrs. Humphrey Ward, on the grounds that they are not set forth in "Robert Elsmere" and "David Grieve" with malice prepense and aforethought, for the destruction of believing souls, but that they are merely the grave, troubled exposition of the writer's private uncertainties in ethics, her own personal perplexities in dogma and doctrine. But, whether it is a question of murder or manslaughter, whether it be an ineliberate slaying of souls or cold-blooded intent to kill, woe betide the woman who unsettles her readers' minds, or who leads them astray in issues of the affections or of the marriage relations! Like the fishermen of the Arabian legend, she has led forth unto destruction an evil and powerful genius whom she will never again be able to imprison in the gloomy casket of her own fancy.

Accused is the age, accused the commonwealth, that ceases to respect, to reverence, the innocence of the young. Even the pagans wrote: "Maxima debetur puero reverentia;" and the ancient Egyptians at the obsequies of their dead, proclaimed the departed spirit damned or saved, according as it had wronged or revered little children during life. Conscientiously careful, tenderly strong, must be the pen that traces the first impression upon the soft pure wax of the virgin mind. Those gravings will outlive the inscriptions cut upon bronze and granite.

Literature, it is true, as Cardinal Newman reminds us, can never be anything else than the manifestations of human nature in human language; that, as science is the reflection of physical nature, literature is the reflection of nature, moral and social. We cannot eliminate the evidences of human passion from the records of human life, and our age of fiction is pre-eminently introspective and analytical. But surely, my sisters, in order to be true to nature, we are not called upon to dip our pens into the stinking slush of foul and debasing passions. In order to be faithful to reality we are not obliged to lay bare to the vulgar the most sacred esoteric mysteries; to make our toilets in public; to expose ourselves, as a master mind has phrased it, in the market place, unveiled and unrobed, to the gaze of a profane world.

If we must faithfully portray nature in our works, my sisters and co-laborers, let us not forget the God of nature in His works. Let us give to the world something better than the vintage of an intoxicating and effervescing romance passed from the dried grapes of exhausted passion and erotic prurience. Let us offer it, not "devil's wine," but "God's wine"—a distillation from the fresh herbs and sweet-smelling simples of a chaste pasturage, giving to fainting souls and faltering hearts the royal cordial of the golden and La Grande Charentaise. The dove that goes forth from the saving ark of a purified literature must not pause to dissect the putrid carcasses tossed upon the rocks by the raging deluge of human passions.—Eleanor C. Donnelly at Catholic Congress.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—The Greatest Wonder of Modern Times.—They correct bile, prevent flatulency, cleanse the liver, and purify the system, renovate the debilitated, strengthen the stomach, increase the appetite, invigorate the nerves, promote health, and remove the weak to an ardour of feeling never before expected. The sale of these Pills throughout the globe astonishes everybody, convincing the most sceptical that there is no medicine equal to Holloway's Pills for removing the complaints which are incidental to the human race. They are indeed a blessing to the afflicted, and a boon to those who suffer from disorder, internal or external. Thousands of persons have testified that by their use alone they have been restored to health after other remedies had proved unsuccessful.
