an and an entrance of an era

A good story is told of a certain Californian judge who delights in a little pleasantry to relieve the monotony of the Supreme Court session. It was during the hearing on appeal of a case in which a certain attorney appeared as a pleader, followed by an escort of office clerks bearing legal tomes. The judge looked up, and with a twinkle in his eye remarked : "How is this? Can't you read law enough in your office without bringing your books here?" "I'm not reading law," retorted the attorney. "I'm reading the decisions of the Supreme Court of California."
