Mr. Glass' Protest.

Mr. Glass in April, 1918, wrote to the board of pension commissioners on December 22, 1918, regarding the case.

December 22, 1918, regarding the case, that the term "bargains" appearing in in part he wrote, "I am not satisfied with the deduction drawn by the pension board, and even were their deductions warranted (which I cannot accept), it is clearly the duty of the state to take care of this man's famaccept), it is clearly the duty of the state to take care of this man's family. It is the duty of the pension board when a case such as this is placed before them, and they find the regulations not broad enough to cover it, to present the facts to council and have adequate amendment made, or at least change them so that the governor-incouncil may take action.

"If the board is prepared to take the responsibility of ignoring the claims of such a case, and is not prepared to even surgest a remedy, then I say-candidly I take exception to such a ruling and will be prepared to discuss the whole matter on the floor of the House when in session.

"Public opinion will never support buch side-steeping of duty, and in my opinion, parliament, when it has the opportunity of expressing itself, will roundly condemn the rulings that have been given. I have the complete file of the correspondence and statements of the doctors and clippings of the condemnation by the press, and it does not reflect credit to the Government, the army or the board of pension commissioners."

The pension board refused the pension because, it said her husband's death was not due to his service in the army. Drs. W. J. Stevenson and A. Thompson 'declared that Pte. Askey's death was due to strangulated hernia, which resulted from his experiences in the army. The Soldiers' Aid Commission took up her case and secured these statements from the physicians.

Hanson Graves Handled Some Butter Which Was Under Weight.

Despite the fact that he sells butter to the very "best" families in London. Hanson Graves, farmer, was fined $5 in police court today for selling underweight prints on January 11.

When asked what he had to say in explanation, after pleading guilty, Mr. Graves said: "I sell butter to the best families in London. I sell to Judge Macheth, one of the finest men that ever drew breath."

"I venture to say that it we sell to was it was not been as the fortnightly recital of the Woman's Music-Club, held Thursday evenfamilies in London. I sell to Judge Macheth, one of the finest men that ever drew breath."

'I venture to say that it wasn't under-weight," cut in Magistrate Marshall Graydon, who was back on the bench again after a two-weeks' absence from the flu.

This didn't fizz on Mr. Graves, who went on to tell how he had supplied the late Sir George Gibbons, and even now was supplying his son George. J. M. McEvoy, who found out at this juncture that he was supposed to be defending Graves, advised his client to let him do the talking. However, as Graves had pleaded guilty, he was fined the "V." He declared that he didn't know the weight of the solidified cream. He had bought it from a country store-keeper, who in turn had purchased it from a farmer.

Figures for the year which have just been compiled at the public library show that during 1918 there were 22,000 volumes of supplementary reading loaned to the various schools of the city. This is an increase of 50 per cent over the figure of 1917.

Under an arrangement with the board of education, this work is handled entrely by the public library, the books being sent out in lots of 40 and 50 to the various grades and returned to the library when the children have read them. In this way the children, during the public school course, get some acquaintance with literature apart from their regular school work.

A large number of the books contained in the supplementary lists power can be found in the East End branch of the public library, and it is the intention of Librarian Fred Landon 40 place many of them in the new sould branch for the convenience of students.
