St. Patricks Protest Game.

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 15.—It was announced by the St. Patricks 1st night that they had protested Saturday night's game, which was won by Ottawa 5 to 2. The reason given is that Referee Lester had no power, under the playing rules, to extend the limit of Dye's penalty for the language that the player used to the official.

The rules state that if a player is guilty of using bad language he is to be fined and reported to the league executive, and makes no provision for any time penalty. Dye was originally put off for two minutes for a check and his penalty was increased to five minutes and then for the rest of the game and no fine imposed.

Treasurer Percy Samby said that the game was being protested not for a replay or a change in the standing so much as to get an official ruling on the matter. He said that if a replay was ordered local charities would greatly benefit.

JAPAN'S MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY

Foreign Films, Chiefly American, Have Grown in Favor During Last Eight Years—2,600 Movie Theatres.

(New York Times.)

The motion-picture industry in Japan has had a remarkable development in the last few years, according to Martin G. Scott, clerk to the United States Trade Commissioner at Tokio. He points out that as far back as 1914 or 1915 foreign films, chiefly American, were growing in favor in Japan, and they have continued to increase in popularity.

"Practically all the cameras used in the moving picture business are imported, as the Japanese have so far been unable to turn out a satisfactory article. American cameras seem to be very popular, although the trust uses French cameras exclusively. Some German makes are also in use. The duty on cameras is 50 per cent.

"With regard to machines, the situation is different. The majority of those in use are of Japanese make, the reason being the difference in price between the imported and the domestic product. The Japanese machine is cheap in quality and also in price, and as most of the theatres are running on close margins, they state they cannot afford American makes, although readily admitting their superiority. Besides, the majority of theatres rent their machines from one of the large companies. The trust manufactures its own machines, furnishing them to its chain of theatres, but it is stated that unless the quality is improved it may have to import machines in the future. A good Japanese machine sells for about $150. One large company handling American machines sold but eight in the last two years.

"As a rule individual theatres rent their films from one of the larger companies, which supply them with enough films to make up a complete bill, and programmes are changed weekly. The rental charge varies widely, running from $100 to $200 per month. The trust states that for a first-class foreign film they often secure $200 per week, and individual performances from $25 to $35. The larger Japanese companies usually buy their films outright and then supply them to their different theatres. A film on the trust circuit will last a little over a year and then it is stored. There is little or no sale after they have made the rounds.

"Complaints are made of pirating of films, and apparently with some foundation, as many individuals make a business of obtaining films in various ways and selling them outright. As there is practically no redress for this sort of thing, American companies should take every possible precaution to safeguard their productions.

"American films practically dominate the market as far as foreign films are concerned, although Italian makes enjoy a certain amount of popularity, and some German films have made a remarkably good run.

"As regards Japanese productions, a decided improvement can be noticed and the producers are following more and more the foreign style of plot with more action and less posturing."

PERSIAN SHOE SHOPS.

"In the bazaars of Kermanshah, Hamadan, and Kasran, as well as in the up-to-date shops of Teheran, I spent much time with the shoemakers," says Roland Gorbald in Asia Magazine. "Before going to see them I was careful to put on a good pair of boots, which would always serve as an introduction, for though the east is slow to move, the craftsmen take a real interest in what they produce, and they appreciate good workmanship, even if it is very different from their own."

"The bazaar shops show a tendency toward specialization. In one shop are made only rag soles, in another leather soles reinforced with cord stitching, and in a third tops are woven upon the sole. In Teheran are aristocratic shops where the styles of Europe and America are copied from illustrations in catalogues that have somehow or other found their way out there. These shops have glass windows and real doors, and they display their goods in a way thought to be truly Persian. The glass windows, though the panes are small, must have cost a deal of money, for glass is almost unknown in Persia. The manter shoemaker stands proudly at the door, and welcomes a customer with the greeting, 'All that I have is yours—my shop and all its goods.' But once the prospective customer is inside, the shopkeeper forgets to be the Frenchman of the Orient, and the bargaining method of the east begins.

"The customer is assured that the price asked is half the actual cost, while all the time the quarter of the sum named would buy the goods. If no business results, politeness is still the order of the day, for a Persian does not consign a man to Hades, but just insists, by referring to him as the son of a burnt father, that his honored parent is already there."
