A DIAMOND NECKLACE.

One Sunday morning two young men sat in the smoking-room of a czy apartment. Outside the snow was falfing silently in great blue-white flakes.

On the divan, his tail and legs ornamented with tufts of curly black hair, his body shaved in the improved fashion, a poodle-slumbered peacefully, and Floyd Tailer, the owner of the premises, attired in a smoking jacket of a horsey plaid, was lolling in an easy chair, his slippered feet stretched toward the fire. His companion, Arthur Van Stade, had been his greatest friend at college and this was their first meeting in three years. Van Stade had been in India killing big game, and had barely escaped having the tables turned, as a large scar across one cheek testified. Tailer had stayed at home, but to him had come the greater change. As he expressed it, he was "a settled down old married man with a family"—which meant that he had the sweetest little wife in the world and a tiny mite of pink and white humanity known in the house are Reby. and a tiny mite of pink-and-white human-ity, known in the house as Baby.

"That's rather a fine dog you have there, Arthur," said Van Stade, turning to the poodle and lazily looking over the sleepy animal."

"Well I should think so," replied Tailer;
"I don't suppose you will believe me when I tell you that when he cause into my possession he was worth no less than $1,000. I tell you that when he cames into my possession he was worth no less than $1,000. The spring after you went away," he went on, "having finished my course, I went over to the other side for the London season. I went to London and in London I stayed long after the time I had allotted to that city had expired. It was there I met Edith. In six weeks we were engaged. The remainder of the summor I passed in Scotland with the family of my fiancee. They had planned to go to Nice when the cold weather came on, and of course I determined to go with them. We went as far as Paris together, but at the last moment I was detained in that city for a few da S and was obliged to allow the rest of the party to proceed without me, promising to join them in a week at most.

"I had run short of funds, and the remittance expected from my father had not arrived. This I did not consider necessary to explain to Edith and her family. I said vaguely that business kept me in Paris. Four days after their departure the letter from my father arrived. He had heard of my engagement and, to my satisfaction, approved of it. Besides the amount expected, he sent an additional $1,000, with which he instructed me to buy a suitable present for Edith. As the modest diamond I had bought for our engagement had been my only gift, I was pleased and gratified with my father's generous present.

"The following morning I started out in search of something for my dear girl, whom I should be with the very next day. My $1,000, which had seemed so much, now appeared ridiculously small, and I had aimost despaired of finding anything worthy of my beloved when my eyes fell upon an extremely beautiful necklace, consisting of two rows of pearls caught together at intervals by small diamond clasps.

"I asked the price.

"I asked the price.

"Five thousand francs, Monsieur,' replied the salesman.

"Exactly the sum I had to spend! I bought it without a moment's hesitation. The little blue box was about to be wrapped up when the salesman discovered some imperfection in the clasp. He was profuse in his applogies and said that it would be repaired and ready for me the follow. be repaired and ready for me the following morning. I explained that this would not do, as I was to leave the city on the night express for Niece. After a moment's hesitation the jeweler promised that I should have it at 6 o'clock, without mourning of the release thaterial and in periect taste. As I was noticing these details something by her side that I had at first taken for a fur cape moved. It proved to be a black French poodle, and as he at up and turned his head toward me I saw that around his neck he wore a broad dor.

"Reaching across the seat with a quick motion, I drew the sleeping animal to my side that a round his neck he wore a broad silver collar from which depended a peculiar heart-shaped padlock.

"Turning to my novel, I soon forgot the intruders, nor did I again think of them until perhaps half an hour later, when I was startled by feeling something cold and wet pressed against my hand. It was the poodle's nose. He had crawled across the seat and was evidently desirous of making my acquaintance.

"Chico, come here," exclaimed a singularly familiar voice.

"The dog paid no attention to his mistress, but wagged his tail contentedly as I stroked his curly head.

"You must excuse my dog, sir,' said my companion. He is a great pet and expects every one to notice him. I am afraid he will annoy you."

"I protested that he would not, and added that I was ford of dogs, poodles in particular. Perhaps my answer was due, in part, to the fact that the woman was young and very beautiful. I had only that minute become aware of this, the light having been too dim in the station to let me see her face. Her voice, too, affected me singularly; it was low and sweet and I was sure that somewhere I had heard it before

'A little later, on looking up, I found that my companion was without books or papers, so taking an illustrated magazine from my satchel I offered it to her. She thanked me and smiled sweetly. After a time I grew tired of my novel and resolved to attempt a little conversation with my neighbor. I asked her if she was going to Nice. She replied that she was, and went on to say that her sister, whom she had expected would go with her, had disappointed her at the last moment.

"She spoke of her dislike for traveling pointed her at the last moment.

"She spoke of her dislike for traveling alone, particularly at night, and explained that as the compartment reserved for ladies was full she was obliged to enter mine. She was sorry to intrude, but the train was about to start and the guard had told her all the other seats were taken. I hastened to assure her that I was glad of the lucky chance that had given me so charm-lucky chance that had given me so charming a companion.

"As the evening wore on she opened a basket containing a dainty lunch. "Would I share it with her? The cook evidently had a ridiculous idea of her appetite. Why, there was enough for six!" This seemed to be the case; so, as we were by this time very well acquainted, I accepted her invitation, and we were soon doing justice to a really excellent lunch.

"I drained the glass. It was brandy of the finest quality I had ever tasted. She seemed to read my thoughts.
"You are a judge of good liquor. That is Otard of 1870."
"Taking the glass from my hand she poured a little of the liquor into it and barely touched it with her lips.
"Soon after this I began to grow sleepy, and as my companion did not seem inclined to talk I made myself as comfortable as circumstances would permit. I clined to talk I made myself as comfortable as circumstances would permit. I turned my head toward the window, through which the surrounding country could be seen dimly in the moonlight as we rushed along, put a roll of rugs under my head and resigned myself to a night of discomfort. The next thing it was broad daylight. I awoke with a dull pain in my head and a sense of weariness that my sleep had rather increased than diminished.

"My companion was sitting by the window reading the book I had given her the night before. On perceiving that I was awake she put down her book and remarked that I was evidently a sound sleeper and that she envied me. She had passed a wretched night and was glad that we should soon be in Nice. I thought of

"I hoped that the necklace would please her, and then, for the first time, it occurred to me that perhaps it would have been better if I had consulted some woman of taste before buying it. A brilliant idea struck me—my companion was just the one to decide. I would ask her opinion. It was not too late to change the necklace for some hing; else if she thought it not suitable. I was sure she would tell me candidly just what she thought.

"Unbuttoning my coat I drew the pack. age from my pocket and laid it on my lap-Removing the wrappings I opened the little blue case. For a moment I could not believe my eyes—it was empty!

"I turned quickly to my companion. She was leaning forward motionless, breathless, her face pale and in her eyes a look that I shall never forget. One hand was pressed convulsively over her heart. She had removed her gloves worn the night before, and on one finger blazed a diamond—the one I had seen the previous day at the jeweler's. In an instant I saw it all. I sprang forward and grasped her wrist—roughly, I am afraid.

"Give me back the necklace, you thief,' I cried. 'I know you,' You stood by my side yesterday in the jeweler's shop on the Avenue de l'Opera. I remember that ring and your voice. You heard me say that I was going to Nice by this train. The liquor you gave me was drugged and you thought to escape before your theft was discovered. It was a very clever scheme, but it has falled. Give me the necklace or I shall turn you over to the police.'

"I stretched out my hand, thinking that, sceing the felly of further conceal-but it has failed. Give me the necklace or I shall turn you over to the police.

'I stretched out my hand, thinking that, sceing the folly of further concealment and the uselessness of denial, she would return the stolen property. I was wrong. She drew herself up haughtily and looked me full in the face.

''You have brought a serious charge against me, she said, 'and one of which I am innocent. I am alone, and a woman'—this with a momentary tremor in her voice that somehow made me ashamed of the way I had spoken to her. 'If, as you say, you have lost a necklace, your only reason for accusing me of having stolen it is that we have been the only occupants of this compartment. The instant you opened the box' and found it empty I saw the awful position I was placed in. Fortunately, however, I can prove my innocence. ''Perhaps you may hesistate before attempting to blackmail an unprotected woman. As soon as we arrive at Nice I shuinsist on going at once to the police station, where a thorough search of my baggage and person shall be made. I shall then ask you to prove that you ever had a necklace.' This remark was accompanied by a smile that was not pleasant to see. 'Until we reach Nice you will not address me again.'

"She leaned back in her seat and turned of tender.

not do, as I was to leave the city on the night express for Niece. After a moment's hesitation the jeweler promised that I should have it at 6 o'clock, without fail.

"As I was leaving the store I noticed a woman standing by my side. I say I noticed a weman; it would be more correct to say that I noticed a beautiful white hand with long taper fingers, on one of which was a diamond of unusual size and brilliancy. In this hand was a small jewelled watch, and as I was leaving the counter I caught a few words spoken in a peculiar musical voice.

"At 6 o'clock I returned, and, true to his promise. the man had the necklace ready for me. Placing it in the inside pocket of my coat, I left the store and had just time to complete a few remaining arrangements before going to the station. I bought a first class ticket and tipped the guard, after giving him to understand in my very best French that I did not wanthim to put other passengers in my compartment. I tucked my travelling rug around my knees, opened a French novel, when the door was opened and a woman him to put other passengers in my compartment.
