A FAMOUS MONASTERY IS SCENE OF DOUBLE SCANDAL

Are Priests by Day and Rogues by Night—Love and Intrigue Result in Horrible Murder.

Warsaw, April 25.—After one of the most astounding trials of modern Poland, Brother Dalmatius, Pauline monk of the famous monastery of Czenstochowa, has just been sentenced to 12 years' hard labor, perpetual exile in Siberia and deprivation of all civil rights for the murder of his cousin, Viclav Macoch, in the monk's cell at the monastery.

Brother Dalmatius killed Macoch in a passion of jealousy—about a woman. This woman, by no means beautiful, nor witty, nor charming, exercised a strange influence on the brother for years. The monk married her to Macoch, and then killed the bridegroom because he could not bear the thought that this man stood where he only wished to stand.

This strange drama, played behind the walls of one of the most famous monasteries in Europe, has thrown a lurid light on many of the monks' lives. Two other brothers Isidor and Basil, are accused of taking part in the crime, and all were concerned in stealing the money wherewith to lead their merry lives, both within and without the cloisters. For years some five of them, including the prior, Fr. Reiman, lived double lives, taking money from the thousands of pious pilgrims who travel yearly to do homage to the miraculous picture of the Virgin, which has hung in the monastery church for centuries; for years they have slipped away from the grey walls, dressed as laymen, and led gay lives in the town, or travelled abroad with beautiful women companions.

Led Double Lives.

The very picture which draws to the monastery such crowds that Father Dalmatius was able to take their offerings for his pleasures without being noticed, has a wonderful history. Legend says it is the oldest picture of the Virgin in the world, and was painted by St. Luke. It is black with age and hung with priceless jewels, including dresses of diamonds, rubies and pearls, which are hung on it at various festivals. Some three years ago many of these gems disappeared. The thieves could not be traced. Now it is believed Brother Dalmatius was the culprit here as well. He has owned to various other crimes, but declares himself innocent of the sacrilegious theft, and the evidence of this guilt in the trial was so slight as to be unconvincing.

A rare shock came to the monks when the police entered the monastery over a year ago and accused one of them of murder, for had it not been for the indiscretion of Brother Dalmatius they would have been able to be merry in secret without the outside world being any the wiser.

It was in the summer that some poor peasants found a sofa in a dyke several miles from the monastery of the Paulines. When opened up it was found to contain the body of a young man, evidently killed in his sleep. Several months passed before the corpse was identified. Several people declared it was that of a missing husband or brother, but the clue always proved a false one. At last after many months' search, the police found that the packing round the sofa had been bought by a servant from the Pauline monastery at Czenstochowa. The police began to watch the monastery, and found out that about the end of July a monk and a servant had taken two open cabs from the monastery gates and set out towards the neighborhood of the dyke with a big, heavy case. The cab-drivers were traced, and one of them confessed, when drunk, that he knew more about the man in the sofa than he dared tell.

Sworn to Secrecy.

Under examination in the third degree, he confessed that Brother Dalmatius had thrown the sofa into the dyke and made him swear that he would never tell of what he had witnessed that July night. The sofa was identified by the monks as belonging to the monastery, and the furs, pillows and linen which were found wrapped round the body as belonging to Father Dalmatius. He had run away, but was soon caught in Austrian territory, and made a statement at once, being, as he said, thoroughly worn out with the harrowing events of the past few months. It was his confession which cast so fierce a light on the lives of several other monks, to say nothing of his own.

"Why did I kill my cousin?" he repeated, when the Austrian police asked him his motive. "Because I could not bear to think he had married the woman I loved, and made her love him. I paid him to marry her, paid him with money I stole from the treasury of the monastery. I have stolen thousands and thousands of rubles since I knew Helena. I could not resist her. I will tell you all about it, for it will relieve my

"I met her in the year 1903. She was the daughter of a post office clerk, and earned her living as a telephone operator at Lodz. I fell madly in love with her. Whenever I could get away from the monastery I used to go and visit her. At first our friendship was quite a platonic one, but afterwards our relations became very close indeed. I suffered all the time. She was not in love with me, I could see that, but cared for a young mechanic named Bulzacki, and threw up her work in Lodz to follow him to Warsaw. I protested with her, but in vain. She would not listen. She had nothing to live on, as she got no work, and the mechanic refused to marry her. So I took a flat for her, furnished it, and set her up with a good banking account. Where did I get the money from? I stole it from the monastery.

"The pilgrims offer such big sums on feast days that there are always thousands of rubles lying in the monastery treasury. I and Brothers Isidor and Basil had double keys made and went in when we wanted money and helped ourselves. The prior, who knew that I was always going up to Warsaw and did not live much with the good monks, protested with me. But I told him I would denounce the monastery and get the Russian government to shut it if he interfered with me.

I was mad to see as much of Helena as possible. I longed to keep her near me. I wanted her to marry one of my family, so that I would be able to see her easily and no questions asked. I tried to persuade my own brother to marry her, but he cried off. He thought she was not the stuff for a good wife. Then I hatched another plan. I told people who knew her and who saw us together, that she had married a brother of mine called Caspar—which was my own name before I became a monk—and that Caspar was dead. I forged both the marriage certificates and "Caspar's" death certificate to this end.

Married Her to Cousin.

"Helena showed it to her Warsaw friends and they believed her. I was now able to visit her as my brother's widow, without any scandal. Then I took her abroad. We had a very nice life, though the prior became very angry at my frequent holidays. But I soon saw that I would have to marry her to somebody. I had a cousin, Vaclav. He was always a waster. Though he had a clerkship in the post office he never did much work. I knew he would marry Helena if I made it worth his while. I told him she was my friend and that I would keep them both if he would marry her. After much haggling he consented. He had several sums of money before the wedding. I and Brother Isidor performed the marriage ceremony in a church in Warsaw. He had a fine wedding and I went back to the monastery happy in the thought that all would be well.

"But Vaclav was always blackmailing me for money. I gave him large sums at a time; but he was never satisfied. He said Helena was a bad woman and had several lovers besides myself. He did worse—he made Helena love him. She grew cool towards me. One night he came to the monastery to demand more money. I said I would give it him. Then we quarreled about Helena and he struck me. After that he went to bed in my cell and slept.

"As I saw him sleeping there and thought of the way he had talked about Helena and then struck me in the face, I grew so angry that I lost all control of myself and killed him as he slept. When I had done it I was deadly frightened and called the serving man Zalog, who has escaped to America. We took him to the dyke together. Then I went to Warsaw to see Helena. She asked where her husband was. I answered that he had gone to America. She began to cry and said she must follow him. Then I told her all. She hated me for it, but she tried to hide me from the police.

ANGORA GOATS USED TU CLEAR BRUSHES

Angora goats will be used this spring and next summer in clearing brush land in the Farmington district, south of Spokane, owned by R. J. Cox, who will plant a commercial apple orchard on his holding.

The animals came from the Bert Howell ranch, near Palouse, Wash. Howell whose land was partly covered with pine trees and underbrush, bought 14 goats as an experiment three years ago for putting the land in condition for cultivation.

Each goat yielded from four to five pounds of wool in the season, and this was sold at prices ranging from 35 to 40 cents a pound. The goats cleared 35 acres of land, which was planted to corn half the crop being sold last year for $375. The rest was fed to 60 hogs, which sold at a good figure in local yards.

Pruning The Appendix

What thousands of people are rushed to the hospitals these days with the idea that pruning the appendix will rid them of the cause and effect of wrong habits of eating and living.

We eat too much, take too little outdoor exercise, breathe impure air, and when the system gets loaded with foul impurities, which irritate the digestive system and set up inflammation, we are told that the operating table is the only place for us.

Why not prevent appendicitis, as well as acute indigestion, peritonitis and Bright's disease of the kidneys by keeping the liver active and the bowels regular. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills cleanse the digestive system of foul impurities more quickly than any treatment you can obtain. They awaken the liver and ensure the healthful action of the kidneys and bowels.
