EXPLORER'S AFRICAN WIDOW
DIES IN JAMAICA

New York, Nov. 23—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People learns from Mr. H. W. Peet, of Beckenham, Kent, England, that Mrs. George Grenfell, widow of the Baptist missionary and Congo Explorer, has just died in Jamaica, where she has been living for some years with her two daughters. Mr. Grenfell and his wife "steamed into the very heart of Africa," on the famous little boat, "The Peace," Mr. Peet writes:

"Grenfell, after the death of his first wife, married in 1879, Miss Rose Patience Edgerley, who was of African race. Her family had lived for several generations in the West Indies, but had returned to the Camer-oons with a Negro Mission Colony, in 1827. The tragedy which has sometimes overtaken the comparatively few missionaries who have married members of the races among whom they work, was happily absent in Grenfell's case, for in his wife he found a devoted and helpful companion, who shared his dangers from savage tribes and fever-ridden country.

"She taught the women and girls of Bolebo, one of the chief mission stations on the Congo River, until after the death of George Grenfell in 1907 she came with her surviving children to England. Today the news is received by the Baptist Missionary Society that Mrs. Grenfell has just passed away in Jamaica where she has lived for some years with her two daughters."
