Crowding problem flies

Fruit flies were at work in Bio Sci

by Pat Earniti

Tragedy struck the Biological Sciences building yesterday when the genetics department accidentally let loose mutant fruit flies. Several people in the building were attacked and killed by the altered insects when an experiment went horribly wrong.

The fruit flies were originally designed to eliminate the overcrowding of undergraduate students in the building. For some reason they multiplied at a horrific rate and killed graduate students as well as undergraduate. "Luckily professors were not afflicted," said Dr. Moss Keeto of the genetics department.

Keeto was at a loss to explain what happened. In tests the fruit flies were 80 per cent effective in being able to discern the difference between graduate and undergraduate students.

Dr. Bea Bailey says the fruit flies were bred to avoid high levels of perspiration on the students skin and therefore would ignore the graduate students. "It was thought that it would also rid the building of lazy tenure professors in the process," she added.

"I don't understand these fruit flies," said third-year education student Andrew Lemming.

Graduate students are being flown in from Toronto to fill in the gap for the time being. Unfortunately these students will simply not be adequate for the long run and more qualified replacements are needed. All departments will be encouraging more undergraduate students to pursue careers in graduate studies.

Dr. Keeto reassures undergraduates that the building is safe to reenter. The fruit flies were bred to have a lifespan of approximately 24 hours (+/-10 hours) and should no longer be a problem.

Nude geer building

by Stan Ding

The Engineering Students' Society (ESS) announced earlier this week plans to open a strip club on campus. The announcement of this project was dependent on a loan from the Federal Development Investment Bank, and is the first of many actions by the ESS to have the Faculty of Engineering considered a distinct society as defined by the Meech Lake Accord.

The planned club will be for engineering students only and any non-engineering student found inside, beside, or in a 175 ft radius outside the club will be arrested and charged with trespassing. The ESS said the club is essential to preserve engineering spirit quickly being overrun with Arts and Education students.

ESS president Toidy Waters points to the diminishing presence of engineers on campus to explain his support of the new Meech Lake Accord. Future actions may include requiring all visitors to Engineering buildings to wear mandatory pocket protectors and to walk in a standard style suggesting you're the greatest thing ever to walk on this earth.

"I don't understand these geers," said third-year Education student Andrew Lemming.

SU president Davey Putterpatter has been in contact with Waters and Bambi, a spokesbimbo for the new strip club. The three were unable to agree on anything except on the fact that they disagreed.

SU is swell

We have the world's greatest SU at the U of A. They do all sorts of great things for us. They talk mean to the administration to make sure our tuition doesn't go up a whole lot. They get us cheap bus passes. They give us scholarship money. They get us discounts at expensive stores. They promote environmental and alcohol awareness. They give us cheap beer in RATT. They send us letters to tell us all the goodly things they are doing. They listen to us when we complain. Love love love suck suck suck suck suck love nice nice nice ga ga goo suck suck suck...
