Good going Wednesday, May 24th, re-

with them that day Col. Ross, Chief Post Office Inspector. He was both an able and a courteous man, and would at all times see that the office got everything needed. As Col. Hanmer had told them, he had been waited on in Paris by a deputation representative of both political parties, and after hearing them, he had made up after hearing them, he had made up interacts?

Another thing they should have was a public library. That was not a public library that was not a public library. That was not a public library. That was not a public library that was not a public library. That was not a public library that was not a public library that was not a public library that was not a public library. sentative of both political parties, and after hearing them, he had made up his mind to help them to get what they wanted, if it was at all possible to do so. As to that, the case was good, and he had no doubts. He had good, and he had no doubts. He had "We'll Never Let the Old Flag heard it said a $5,000 building would have sufficed. This was ridiculous and he was certain that they all felt as he did, that the money had been well spent. They had not only to build for the Burfordites of the present, but also for those of the future. It should be remembered that four rural mails.

be remembered that four rural mails a day now went out of the Burford post office, and that adequate room was an essential.

Well he had brought the matter to the attention of Hon, Mr. Rogers with favorable results, and he wished to take the opportunity to pay a personal tribute to that gentleman, Mr. Rogers was a high-minded man, held in the highest esteem by the best members on both sides of the House. He must admit that a clerk of the Postal department, when asked to give the Minister the population of Purford, had mistakenly said 4,500, having quoted the figures for the Township, but that aside, the structure was not one whit too good for the inhabitants of their progressive community. For himself, if the people were satisfied, he felt fully repaid. There were two more things which he thought Burford should be the cheapest and most prompt basis.

MR. W. G. RAYMOND

Congratulated the village upon the splendid building and Mr Fisher upon the value of a more progressive village, or residents of a more progressive vill

MR. J. C. NUNAN

Post Master of Paris, said he considered that Burford needs fully justified the new building. He also paid tribute to Col. Ross and the Post Office department, pointing out that a parcel which ordinarily would cost 84 cents to send to France, had a war rate of 32 cents.

who by the bye is in his 80th year Hay, ton and still most vigorous, gave some interesting reminiscences of the time when Mt. Vernon was a good deal larger than Burford. At that period every two days.

MR. P. H. SECORD.

President of the firm of Secord and Son, said that he took more than a usual interest in the events of the day, as he used to be a resident of Burford Township. He was naturally pleased to have heard so many compliments passed that day upon the structure. This was the third public building they had constructed, the other two consisting of those at Newmarket and Brantford. North Brant certainly had a most excellent repre-MR. P. H. said that he was very glad indeed to be a participant in the proceedings of the day in connection with the fine and commodious building which Mr. Fisher had been able to secure for them. To his mind, nothing was too good for Burford. As collector of Customs at the Brantford port, he would be very glad indeed to see an outpost at Burford. He felt sure that Burford would do her part in connection with the arresh tion with the 215th.

MAYOR PATTERSON, of Paris, voiced the congratulations of that place. Burford ranked next to Paris as the best place in the County

COL. HANMER returned hearty thanks to the speakers and those in attendance, and proceedings closed with the National Anthem. Afterwards an adjournment took lace to the court room where coffee said that this was certainly a great day for Burford The public building just opened was for all of them, whereas the armouries, to all intents and purposes were for the military alone. He understood that the residents had the matter of a library well under way, and he hoped in the future that more business concerns would locate in the village and electric railway reach them.

LT. COL. H. COCKSHUTT. joined in the general congratulations of the day. He was not there for recruiting purposes, but he would like to mention that his Battalion, 215th, would be sincerely glad to have a Burford platoon.
