fruit-eakes, cocosnut-cakes, etc., were voted "just excellent" by the surprised gentler sex. The young men are laying up future puntahment at the aummer incident. picnics.

Mr. Barnby, High School student, eccupied the chair, and made the following opening address:—

THE CHAIRMAN'S SPEECE. LADIES AND GENTLEMEN, - A YOU STO doubtless aware, I have been appointed chairman for the evening, but I can as sure you that it does not give me great pleasure to stand up here tonight. I would rather sit at the door and enjoy the entertainment. But in this life there are duties allotted to us, and we must perform these duties as best we may. As I have no prepared speech, and the even-ing is far advanced, it would not be prudent for me to trouble you with any attempt at a lengthy address. I trust you all have enjoyed yourselves; that you reliahed the tea—or the coffee; rathentertainment is superior to yours. Like us you had the flour to bake; but who tilled the land and sowed the wheat? Men. Who took the wheat to the mill and ground it there? Men. I can tell the ladies that tonight no woman has had a finger in this pie. (Laughter and applause.) You know, too, that in order to get the water and fleur to rise, you must mix something with it, and that has been provided by man. (Laughter.) The ladies also provided for the mind, and I think the prices they wave were and I think the pieces they gave were composed mainly by men. (Expressions of dissent on the faces of the girls.) I believe that everything in the intellectual line tonight will be composed by men. (Male applause.) The ladies are fond of talking about women's rights, women's rights, women's rights. We men also have our rights. One of these is the privilege of going shopping. He then quizzed the opposite sex about their fickleness when shopping, and closed by introducing the chorus by the waiters. These gentlemen, who were very enthusiastically received, sang the following song, composed by Willie Armstrong, to the air of "Auld Lang Syne":—

THE YOUNG MEN'S SONG. We come before you, friends, tonight, With crutches thrown saide. To show you little of our might; Quite sure you'll not deride. Our aprons, caps, and bread and cake, We think them very nice; For making all we honor take, And cut up every slice, To greater work we do aspire; For pulpit, press, and main; And all important things require The noble help of man. The noble help of man.

Far up above this world we soar,

To measure sun and moon;

Deep, deep into the earth we bore,

And search down underground. We need not with the world contend For rights which are our own; We know they always need young men With muscle, brain and bone, With muscle, brain and bone,
Tho ladies think they do excel
With needle and with paste;
But even this, we too do well.
And suit the people's taste.
But dishwashing we do dfsdain;
We do not think 'tis fair
To make the noble creature, man,
Such ugly work to share. But as to bachelor's life we're doomed, And have to do the work, Seme patent rig we'll get up soon To wash off all the dirt. O! my, where are the men," they say!
"O, say, where are the men?"
For every little job they'll send
And say, "Where are the men?"

The coffee was piping hot, and the sandwiches, jelly cales, ruit-cakes, coccanut-cakes, atc. the end. The former never needlessly sacrificed a soldier; and that also could be said of his immortal coadjutor Nelson. The speaker then drew a graphic picture of the battle of Waterloo, which was an admirable bit of word painting. Wellington's character was summed up in his reply to a Scotch colonel at a critical moment in that momentous contest : "I and you and every man must stand our ground." The lecturer would not pray fer war, he would not hope for war, but should the day come when war was forced upon us, may we prove worthy of the sires who bore us, and filled and thrilled sires who bore us, and falled and thrilled with the spirit which animated the heroes of Waterloo, rally around the old flag. (Applause.) He then went on to notice leaders as the political world. The moral and pelitical state of the world at the time of the downfall of Napoleon beggared description. In England the public debt crushed the people. Taxes were exorbitant. Bread was taxed. Even as common and necessary an arti-cle as salt was taxed many times its worth, in some cases $20 a cwt. A man you all have enjoyed yourselves; that you reliabed the tea—or the coffee; rather—provided by the young men. I can tell the congregation that all was done by the young men here tonight in the gallery. (Applause by the congregation and blushes by the young men in the gallery.) I heard one remark everywhere tonight: "The coffee is very good." I think, therefore, the young men are to be congratulated upon their success in this line. About a year ago we had an entertainment got up entirely by the young ladies, and it was success. (Hear, hear.) But I would say to the girls tonight that I want to show how our entertainment is superior to yours. Like property to the value of $1.25 he was property to the value of $1.25 he was promptly hanged. Representative government at the beginning of this century was a mere figment. Two-thirds of the members of the Commons were appointed by the peers who owned the boroughs. After alluding to the prominent figures in the carrying of the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on instructed by these leaders, but we cannot admire them any more than we cannot admire them any more than we cannot be seen that the control of the carrying of the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the carrying of the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the carrying of the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the carrying of the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the carrying of the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the carrying of the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the carrying of the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the carrying of the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the carrying of the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the carrying of the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the carrying of the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length of the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length of the Reform Bill, the lecturer dwelt at length on the Reform Bill, the Reform Bil two great statesmen and life-long politi-cal antagonists—Beaconsfield and Gladstone. He described Disraeli's first appearance as a parliamentary debator, and traced his course until his triumphbearing with him "Peace with Honor."

Beaconfield loved England, and was jealous of her honor and supremacy amongst the nations. The Vienna congress was the crowning triumph of his political career. The Russian Bear these who ally themselves to them, or sheepskins. sat upon the shores of the Bosphorus not content with its vast possession, like a hungry boy at Christmas it wanted a slice of Turkey. He would not enter the field of conflict between capital and labor. There are grievances on both a sides; yet he believed the struggle would result in ultimate good. A raylew of the condition of both classes at the beginning of the century would do much ten heal the breach. The Golden Bule acted out would solve the whole preblem: "Do unto others as ye would they should do unto you." I The lecturer then paid an eloquent tribute to the late J. B. Gough, the temperate are apostle, and was loudly applauded at the condition of his panegyrie. lor of the Exchequer (Disraell), at 2 o'clock in the morning a young parlia-mentarian rose to reply, and soon his magnetic voice chained the attention of magnetic voice chained the attention of magnetic voice chained the attention of the House. At 4.30 a.m. the House divided, and the Government was in a minority of 19. The hero of that hour was none other than William Ewart Gladatone, the man toward whom today the eyes of the civilized world are turned.

The storms of passion and temptation cast him down and overwhelm him. But Religion comes, messenger of Ged, until his affections, intelligence, will — his affections, intelligence, will — his affections, intelligence. "O. say, where are the men?"

Notwithstanding the disclaimer about washing the dishes made by the poet in the song given above, the venerable sexton says that the church was handed over to him next day in a cleaner condition than after any other social or teameeting.

Rev. Mr. Turk humorously prefaced his lecture by saying that he really be good as he is great. He is a living refutation of the assertion that it is impossible for a politician to be a Christian.

Applause.) Whatever may be the issue chairman about the young men doing so nicely without the young ladies, he would not be surprised to hear that the
