After All, Why Not?

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

Some friends of mine had a near, a very near, automobile accident recently. They were coming down a steep hill when almost the worst thing that can happen to a machine happened to them—the steering gear broke. At the foot of the hill was a bridge over a pond; they careened frantically across the bridge and plunged part way under the one rail fence. They came to a stop with two wheels under the fence, hanging over a ten-foot drop and fifteen feet of water. You can imagine the celerity with which they climbed out on the farther side of the machine, and the fervidness with which they rejoiced over their narrow escape. Of course they made for the telephone. You can imagine, too, that the next thing they did was to find their way to the nearest telephone and telephone to the nearest garage for assistance. But I don't believe you can imagine the rest. The garage was twenty miles away, and in the hour of waiting, instead of reviewing his escape from the angles and talking it over with all the inhabitants of the farmhouse where he telephoned, what do you suppose the male motorist did? He drew his folding fishing-rod out of his pocket, remarked, "This looks like good fishing to me," and proceeded to catch a pickerel while he waited. How Many People Would Have Done It? Everyone who hears the story laughs heartily and says, "Isn't that just like Hastings?" You see, it seems to all of us a most unusual thing to do. We know we wouldn't have done it, and we know ninety-nine people out of a hundred would never have thought of settling down to fishing ten minutes after such a hair-breadth escape. And yet, when you look at it thoughtfully, isn't it the most natural instead of the unnatural thing? The danger was past, they had escaped, the damage to the machine was irreparable, all that could be done about having it repaired had been done, the motorist found himself near a fish pond, he loved fishing, he had to wait an hour, why not fish? How Much Better If We All Refused To Fuss. Wouldn't it be better if more of us would take life in that simple way and not fuss so? I remember hearing the motorist fisherman say some time ago that "while we live let's live" was his favorite motto. I think he carries it out even better than he realizes. He lives each moment to the full, puts it behind him and lives the next, instead of waiting half his life rehearsing and fussing over the other half.

Letters of Thanks From Soldiers.

Port Blandford, October 20th, 1915.
Editor Evening Telegram:
Dear Sir,—Will you kindly insert the enclosed letters in your paper, which were received by my sister and I, from wounded soldiers in St. Thomas' Hospital, London. Please return letters again to IRENE E. STONE.

FROM SAPPER HERON.

No. 9 Edward Ward,
St. Thomas's Hospital,
London, S.E.
Aug. 12th, 1915.

Dear Miss Stone,—I have used your socks, mittens and scarves, which were sent to me during the day they came in very useful at night sleeping out in the open. Hoping you will be spared in good health to carry on the good work of knitting socks, mittens, and body belts for the boys.

Believe, me, yours respectfully,

F. DODGSON.

STORMS CEASED.—The snow storms that raged on the Labrador coast are over, according to a message received by the Marine and Fisheries Department last evening.

FROM DRIVER DODGSON, R. F. A.

Sunday, Oct. 3rd, 1915.
Dear Miss Stone,—I hope you will excuse me taking the liberty of writing these few lines, but I think it is only right for me to thank you for sending me such a beautiful pair of warm socks. I was in St. Thomas's Hospital when they were given me, but I am now with the third line of my Regiment, being almost better now. Perhaps you would like me to give you an account of my doings while out in France, so here goes: It was on March 30th, at midnight, when (along with my two cousins who are also in our battery) we set sail for Southampton and landed at Havre (France) by sea as near as I can remember 5.30 a.m. here we had breakfast and had to wait and feed our horses; we stayed for two days at Havre waiting to be sent into the firing line. Havre is a kind of receiving or collecting station. All troops who land there are sent to different parts of the country; we were not sent into action straight away but were kept on firing practice for a

Trafalgar Concert.

The concert held at the College Hall last night in aid of the Trafalgar Fund, was largely attended. Addresses were given by His Excellency the Governor, His Lordship the Bishop of Newfoundland, and a telegram from His Grace the Archbishop, who was unavoidably detained, was read by the Chairman, Mr. W. G. Gosling. Following the addresses an enjoyable concert programme was taken up and the National Anthem played by the bands and sung by the audience brought the entertainment to a close.

The Cochrane Street Church.

Contractor Cook, of the Downing Cook Co., Ltd., of Montreal, arrived in the city yesterday to inspect the construction work of the Cochrane Street Methodist Centennial Church. The steel frame for the dome is now placed in position and is a massive piece of work. The roofers are hard at work roofing in the building with asbestos shingles, the dome is to be covered with copper. The construction work is progressing favourably and splendid work is being done under the careful supervision of Mr. Gibbs who has now over ninety men employed. The heating apparatus is being installed. The electric wires, for further protection, are being brought to the entrance on Bennerman Street underground. The building is in the hands of competent and up to date contractors and when finished will be an ornament to the East End of the city. War times are said to be hard times for church building, owing to so many claims being made on the generosity of our people, but we must congratulate the members of the Building Committee on their push and energy in providing a Church home for the members of their congregation.

A Very Ancient City.

Saloniki is a very ancient city, as its numerous and extensive antiquities attest—Roman triumphal arches and Byzantine remains. Thessalonica, it was called by the Romans and later Greeks, but on the site there once stood an older Greek city, that of Therna, so called because of the hot springs in the neighborhood. Thessalonica was founded in the year 315 B.C., by Cassander who gave it the name of his wife; a sister of Alexander the Great, and its modern name is based on its ancient one. It was a military and commercial station on the main road between Rome and the East. It was in Thessalonica that Cicero spent the melancholy days of his exile and poured out those egotistical lamentations that became "wearisome to gods and men"; and here was erected a triumphal arch, much of which still stands, to commemorate the victory at Philippi—not far distant—where Antony and young Octavius triumphed over the Senatorial army, led by Brutus and Cassius, two of the murderers of Julius Caesar.—The Wesleyan.

The Hygiene of Gas Lighting.

Incandescent gas is the ideal form of illumination for a living room. The soft yet brilliant light given off floods the room, and is restful both to the eyes and to the senses, preventing homelessness or sewing from being a source of eyestrain.

It has, moreover, been scientifically determined that the strong uprush of heated products of combustion from gas burners draws up the emanations from the skin and lungs of the occupants of the room, chairs and sterilizes any accompanying germs, and, reaching the ceiling, diffuses through the plaster so rapidly as to draw fresh air from the windows and other openings.
