What are Necessities?

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

What queer things financial standards and the standards by which we determine luxuries and necessities are! We were reading in the newspapers the other day a letter from a woman who was telling how difficult it was to live on eighteen dollars a week. She told of various hardships (the chief one seemed to be dodging bill collectors) and ended plaintively, "And I never had a hat that cost more than twelve dollars."

Never But One Hat That Cost Over Seven Dollars.

The visiting lady was greatly amused at that. "I never had but one hat that cost more than seven," she commented. "That cost ten, and I felt fearfully extravagant when I bought it. Yet I don't think my husband ever made less than thirty dollars a week, even when we were first married."

And, as I happen to know, he makes at least double that now. And yet she considers ten dollars for a hat "fearfully extravagant!"

That's a study in standards for you.

And here is another. She Had Wanted A Magazine Subscription All Her Life.

A magazine agent was telling me about her work. "I feel very proud of what I've accomplished to-day," she said. "I persuaded a man to let his wife have a subscription to my magazine. I happen to know she's been wanting one for years and years—she's a woman I know personally—but he didn't think it was necessary. Poor folks? Hardly! You wouldn't think so if you could see their house, but he just doesn't consider magazines a necessity or even a justifiable luxury."

As I listened to her I thought of a little house where the bookcases are overflowing with books, and the tables are thickly littered with a delightful disorder of magazines. This house is rather shabby, and so are the master and mistress, and I heard the mistress say the other day when a friend of hers was bemoaning the increased price of her favorite talcum, "I never bought a box of talcum powder in my life."

Well Oh, But Too Poor For A Specialist.

'Not long ago a neighbour's baby was very ill. Thinking to be helpful, we told her the name of a specialist who in a similar illness had saved the life of a friend's baby. "Oh, I guess Dr. L. is all right," she said, naming a general practitioner of moderate prices and no great repute. And neither trained nurse nor specialist did they employ, though the baby hovered at death's door, and is still puny. And yet they have twice the money of the friend for whose child the specialist in question had been called into consultation. Only they aren't the kind of people who spend their money for that sort of thing.

Nothing reveals anyone's character more surely than the things for which he will and will not spend money.

Show me a man's check stubs and expense account and I will tell you what manner of men he is.

ful wife and mother. My home was happy at first and my love for my husband would have always continued except that he is bestowing the love and attentions that belong to me on another. He still supports his family to a certain extent, but all the spare money and time that would make me and my child happy he spends elsewhere. Is it better for us to try to rekindle the old love or to sever the ties that unite us forever?

Answer. Circumstances greatly alter cases like this. Have you grounds for a divorce with alimony? If not, could you support yourself and child? Of course it's better to rekindle the old love if you possibly can. Can't you consult some faithful friend who knows the exact circumstances?

"Nothing," I've about given up trying to cure it.

"That is not wise. Do as I did and you will probably be cured in a short time. I used Zylex and Zylex Soap with it and my Eczema began to improve at once. A couple of boxes cured. You can get Zylex at your druggists."
