Willow Glen was immediately put into the hands of carpenters and decorators to undergo thorough repairs, and Arthurthrew Limself with zest into the work of supervision, feeling that he must have employment if he would not lose his reason.

Arthur Halstead and Ida Montrose were married on the sixth of May, the wedding taking place in the First Congregational Church of Albany, after which a reception was given in the grand parlor of the hotel where Mr. Montrose had made his home during the last few weeks.

Late in the afternoon of the same day the young people started on their totr, which was to comprise a trip to the White Mountains, up the St. Lawrence and the great lakes, thence to their own home.

That very evening, in glancing over a paper, Arthur read, among a list of pas-sengers bound for Europe upon a great gleamer, the name of Hon. Dudley Wal-demar and wite, and Miss Audrey Walde-

For a moment it seemed as if his heart had stopped its beating forever, and if he could have dropped into oblivion then and there, he would have welcomed death without a regret.

After their return from the mountains and lakes, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Haistead took up their abode at Willow Glen, but Ida Haistead had discovered ere this their base bushond's heart was not wholly that her husband's heart was not wholly He was negligent of no kindness or attention; indeed, he was too kind and attentive—too punctilious in the performance of every duty. It was too evident that he was striving in every way to make up for his want of affection for her

There was nothing tangible that she could complain of, but she knew in her heart that he did not love her.

She grew quiet and sad; the light died from her eyes, the color from her cheeks, the smiles from her lips.

But only for a time; then she became caim and serene, a peace that was almost divine gradually dawned upon her face, and she took up the burden of life with the patience and sweetness of an angel, meekly bearing her cross and striving to do the best that she could, even though she had nothing but the husks of a dead love to feed upon.

CHAPTER IX.

Meanwhile, as we know, Audrey Waldemar had gone abroad with her parents. They roved from place to place, wnerever there was anything of interest to be seen, trying to bring back the light to the eyes, the smiles to the lips of their daughter.

But it appeared to be all in vain.

She seemed to droop and fade—nothing aroused her interest, nothing gave her any pleasure; and the terrible fear that perhaps they were about to lose the one treasure of their old age, began to follow them about like the grim shadow of some monster watching for his pres. But at length something happened to nange all this. During their sight-seeing they were detained one day at a small ned one day at a small country inn a heavy storm coming suddenly upon est, but it seemed as if fate had doon them, when, just as they were leaving the next morning, they discovered that they had spent a day and a night in the use with a man who was dying with The hearts of the fond father and nearly fainted within them at

Not a thought of any danger to themselves disturbed them; their anxiety was all for their idolized child, who, they leared, in her present weak and nerveless state, would be liable to fall an easy

But their fear. But their fears were groundless, and now Audrey herself was about to be aroused from the lethargy which had hitherto wrapped her about like a somber garment, for within a fortnight after the night spent at that country inn, both father, and mother were stricken with the night spent at that country inn, both father and mother were stricken with that dread disease, and before the end of another two weeks both were quietly sleeping their last long sleep under the green sods of a small town in Germany. Thus the delicate girl was stripped of the love and care which, until now, had shielded her from every ill that could be turned aside from her, and she was left to battle with the world alone.

Alone' it is almost the saddest word in Alone! It is almost the saddest word in the world, and it was one of fearful sig-nificance in that far-off country, where she was a stranger and a wanderer, But, as it happened—if such things ever do simply happen—another American family were stopping in the same town where Mr. and Mrs. Waldemar had died, ing for and supporting her through the last sad rites performed over her loved ones, and then brought her back with them to her own country and to her now desolate home. Before leaving America Mr. Waldemar Before leaving America Mr. Waldemar had made his will, appointing a long trusted friend as its executor, and the guardian of his child, in the event of his death, and to him Audrey at once appealed for sympathy and counsel in her borrow and loneliness.

She preferred to reside in the home of the childhood, at least while her grief was so fresh, and her guardian had sequired Mrs. Allen, whom we have already mentioned, and who was a woman of pulture and refinement, to act as companion and housekeeper to the desolate

panion and housekeeper to the desolate

nd here she had lived a sad, secluded life for six years—up to the time when we first saw her—never going into society, scarcely ever receiving company, but occupying her time with study and music, of which she was passionately food on the same statement of music, of which she was passionately fond, and in performing deeds of charity ong the poor in the vicinity of her home.

She had never met Arthur Halstead since his marriage. She knew that he was married for she had re d in some papers, which had come to her across the Atlantic, a description of his grand wedding and his lovely bride. But that was all she knew about him. She never spoke his name, she never mentioned that sorrow and disappointment of her life, but she never ceased to love him; and often, as she sat on that balcony where we have seen her with little Rich, and where she loved to sit at sunset and gaze upon the distant mountains, she would almost unconsciously murmur those sad words of Whittier's:

those sad words of Whittier's: "God pity them both, and pity us all, Who vainly the dreams of youth recall; For all sad words of tongue or pen. The saddest are these: 'It might have

But as the years went by she developed into the loveliest womanhood, and at twenty-three, had she mingled in society, she would have been the sun and center of its most brilliant circles. Sorrow had strengthened and refined her character, added dignity, to her bear-ing, until her name had become the syn-onym for kindness and benevolence among those who were the recipients of her charities, and to whom she had be-come a veritable priestess, who was to be reverenced and almost adored. And so, with this outline of her previous history, we will take up our narrative where we left it, just as she was on the point of adopting the little waif who had been so strangely thrown upon her tender mercies.

LAWN BOWLING.

Two interesting competitions are at present in progress on the greens of the London Bowling Club. One is the annual rink competition, in which 25 rinks are entered. The preliminary round in this competition has been completed. The other match is the club handicap singles, in which 152 members are entered. The results of the preliminary round have already been published in The Advertiser of Wednesday last, while the scores in the first and second rounds are given below. In the handicap singles, in addition to the regular first prize, the winner takes possession for a year of the handsome cup and pedestal presented by Mr. C. H. Ward. The member winning the cup for two years in succession becomes its owner. This is the first year that the cup has been competed for, and it is giving additional interest to the match. The results of the completed rounds

THE OAR.

THE COMING REGATTA. Arrangements are going on for the annual regatta of the London Rowing Club, which will be held toward the end of the present month. The gratifying height of water in the river during the present season has afforded abundant opportunity for training, and one of the results of the members' consistant practice was the excellent showing made by a local four at Rondeau, when they defeated two crack fours from Walkerville. coming regatta should be one of the most interesting aquatic events ever .10 held in London. The club have been endeavoring to secure some outside clubs for the regatta, and have succeeded in securing the promise of the .15 attendance of a junior four from the Argonaut Club of Toronto. This will result in imparting added interest to the various contests to be pulled off. No date has yet been set for the regatta, but the last Saturday of the month will probably be selected.

Monbars, is the observed of all observers on the track at the Toronto fair. started in the 2:50 class with a large field and won the race in 2:241/6 walking under the wire in the fourth heat, when the best time was made. Mr. Charles Kennedy, the well-known orseman, who has driven on the Grand Circuit for years, said after the race that in his opinion Lillybars was the best trotting mare in Canada, or that ever has been in Canada. A number of Monbars' colts are starting in the Canada Futurity race in Toronto next week, and Lillybars and some more good ones are starting in fast company at Hamilton for stakes the following week. After the race in Toronto the owners were offered a handsome figure for Lillybars, but declined it, as they desire to mark her.

LATO reproved a man for daily playing dice. "You reprove me for a little thing," said the culprit. "Habit," replied Plato, "is no little thing." At first sight the choice of breakfast coffee seems trifling. Any coffee will do. But the question of daily habit is important. To gain a little extra strength one day is a trifle; but to gain daily strength continuously is to acquire a new vigor of health. That is why Chase & Sanborn's Coffee for breakfast is so important. AN OPEN LETTER

To Whom It May Concern:

WE are very anxious to make this year's exhibition of ours the best we ever had, and the most successful in every respect. With this view before us, we have secured one of the finest assortments of the old Genuine Heintzman & Co. Pianos, in special styles and designs of fancy French Burl Walnuts, Circassian Walnuts, Beautiful Spanish Mahogany, and other woods, for display at our Exhibition Stand in Main Building at Western Fair, and in our London Warerooms, 217 Dundas Street, corner Clarence.

We have marked each Piano down to "ROCK-BOTTOM PRICES" and within the reach of all requiring a first-class Piano, and on Easy Terms of Payment, and will esteem it a kindness if you will call and examine The Genuine Heintzman & Co. Pianos before purchasing any other, and we are persuaded to believe after you have done so, you will make up your mind to buy from us, as the best is always the cheapest in the end—and then you will never have cause to regret your Second-hand Organs and Pianos taken as part payment and full value allowed for them. Pianos from $250 and upwards, payable $5 to $8 per month. Organs from $20 and upwards, payable $2 to $4 per month.

Hoping you will kindly call and see us, or write,

LIPTON'S PLANS. London, Sept. 8.—It is now practi-callly settled that Sir Thomas Lipton's next challenger for the America cup will be built entirely of steel. Mr. Fife's experiences with recent challengers have made him distrustful of new metals and alloys, and he has decided to drop them. Consequently the contract which the Dennys have in hand provides for the building of a cup racer wholly of steel. frames are to be of bulbed angle steel and the plating will be thin pates of

The Dennys' experimental tank has been used, but the experiments have not been allowed, as previously, to dominate the model. The latter will e prepared at Fairle, principally from knowledge of the faults and conditions which the designer recognized in the first Lipton challenger. This completed model, when tested, may be found satisfactory and no alterations may be made. This is directly opposite to Mr. Watson's method for the yer plate-The Alderman, ch. Mr. Fife declines to discuss the matter, but long prior to the talk of even the second Shamrock, he said that with his knowledge of the faults the Shamrock, I. he was confident he could produce a boat fifteen minutes faster over the cup course. Commenting on the preparations being made on the Clyde in connection with Sir Thomas Lipton's intention to challenge again for the American cup, the Yachting World Saturday says: "The Shamrock I., which is undergoing a thorough overhauling, is wonderfully well preserved. Capt. Wringe, who is expected to have sole control of the next challenger, is superintending the work on the Shamrock I., and is constantly in consultation with Mr. Fife. By the time the Shamrock I. returns to winter moorings at Gare Loch, Scotland, it is practically certain that a good start will have been made with building the Shamrock
