CARSON'S DEMAND IS REFUSED BY LABORITES

Ramsay Macdonald Says They Will Not Grant Total Exclusion of Ulster.

[Canadian Press.] Montreal, March 16 .- A London cable to the Daily Mall says: Ramsay MacDonald, the parliamentary Labor leader, declares in the Daily Citizen this morning that the Labor party will not accept Sir Edward Carson's demand for unlimited exclusion of Ulster.

The Morning Post (Conservative, in its editorial this morning, which is headed "Drifting to Civil War," accuses the Government of deliberately provoking a terrible catastrophe rather than risk the

A long time afterward the throbbing I-I hope you will forget what I said. You eased, bell-buoys whistled and clanged about them; the sea suddenly grew calm and lifeless; they slid over it as if it were a quavering sheet of ice; and lights sneaked out of the fog and approached with stealthy swiftness. Bells rang below and above them, sailors sprang up from everywhere, and calls were heard below; the rattling of chains and the thumping of heavy luggage took the place of that steady, monotonous beat of the engines. People began to infest the deck, limp and groaning, harassed but voiceless. A mighty sigh seemed to envelop the whole ship—a sigh of relief.

Then it was that these two arose stiffly about them; the sea suddenly grew calm

Then it was that these two arose stiffly rom their sheltered bench and gave heed the things that were about hem.
The Channel was behind them.

The Channel was benind them.
They journeyed to Paris by the night mail. He was waiting for her on the platform when she descended from the "wagon lit" in the Gare du Nord. Sleep passengers crowded with them into the customs department. She, alone among them all, was smiling brightly, as if the them all, was smiling brightly, as if the world could be sweet at an hour when, by all odds, it should be sleepiest.

"I was up and on the lookout for you at Amiens," he declared, as they walked off together. "You might have got off there, you know," with a wry grin.

by what had happened in—in connection with Challis Wrandall?"

"You forget that it is you that I love," she responded simply.

"But why should Sara urge you to marry Leslie if there is anything—" or "Leslie if there is anything—" or "Hush! Here is the waiter. Come to the connection with the challis Wrandall?"

there, you know," with a wry grin.
"I shall not run away from you again,
Brandon," she said earnestly. "I promise,

Brandon," she said earnestly. I promise, on my honor."

"By Jove," he cried, "that's a relief!"
Then he broke into a happy laugh.

"I shall go to the Ritz," she said, after her effects had been examined and were ready for release.

"I thought so," he announced calmly, "I wired for rooms before I left London."

"Really, this is ridic——"

"Don't frown like that, Hetty," he pleaded

As they rattled and bounced over the cobble-stones in a taxi-metre on the way to the Place Vendome, he devoted the whole of his conversation to the delicious breakfast they were to have, expatiating glibly on the wonderful berries that would ome first in that always-to-be-remembered meal. She was ravenously hungry by the time they reached the hotel, jusby the time they reached the hotel, just from listening to his dissertation on chops and rolls and coffee as they are served in Paris, to say nothing of waffles and honey and the marmalade that no Eng-lishman can do without. Alone in his room, however, he was quite another person. His calm assur-ance took flight the instant he closed the ance took flight the instant he closed the door and moodily began to prepare for his bath. Resolution was undiminished, but the facts in the case were most desolating. Whatever it was that stood between them, there was no gainsaying its power to influence their lives. It was no trifle that caused her to take this second flight, and the sooner he came to realize triffe that caused her to take this second flight, and the sooner he came to realize the seriousness of opposition the better.

He made up his mind on one point in that half-hour before breakfast; if she asked him again to let her go her way in peace, it was only fair to her and right in peace, it was only fair to her and right that he should submit to the inevitable. She loved him, he was sure of it. Then there must be a very good reason for her perplexing attitude toward him. He would make one more attempt to have the truth make one more attempt to have the truth cept the situation as hopeless, for the time being at least. She should know that he loved her deeply enough for that.

She joined him in the little open air cafe, and they sat down at a table in a Folling in that, he wo remote corner. There were few people breakfasting. In her tender blue eyes there was a look of sadness that haunted even as she smiled and called him

"Hetty, darling," he said, leaning for-ward and laying his hand on hers, "can't you tell me what it is?" She was prepared for the question. In her heart she knew the time had come when she must be fair with him. He observed the pallor that stole into her warm, smooth cheeks as she regarded him fixedly for a long time before replying.
"There is only one person in the world who can tell you, Brandon. It is for her to decide. I mean Sara Wrandall."

to decide. I mean Sara Wrandall."

He felt a queer, sickening sensation of uneasiness s...ak into existence. In the back of his mind, a hateful fear began to shape itself. For a long time he looked into her sombre eyes, and as he looked the fear that was hateful took on something of a definite shape.

"Did you know her husband?" he asked, and somehow he knew what the answer would be.

was startled. Her lips remained parted.

He watched her closely. "Has this—this secret anything to do with Challis"

"It has," said she, meeting his gaze steadily. His hands-clutched the edge of the table in a grip that turned the knuckles white. "Hetty!" he cried, in a hoarse whisper. You—can't mean that you—"
"You must go to Sara," she cried huriedly. "Haven't I told you that she is

"Were you in love with that infernal coundrel?" he demanded flercely. "Sara knows everything. She will tell Were you carrying on an affair with him while professing to be the friend of his wife? Tell me that! Did she find you out and—"
"Oh, Brandon, why will you persist?"
she cried, her eyes aflame. "I can tell you no more. Why do you glare at me as if I were the meanest thing on earth?
Is this love? Is this your idea of greatness? Isn't it enough for you to know that Sara is my loyal, devoted friend;

Glasgow, March 16 .- Dr. James Devon, prison commissioner for Scotland, when of the Bell Telephone system, and its attacked today by an irate militant suffragette, armed with a dog whip, took the law into his own hands and knocked his assailant down with a well-aimed left hand blow. The woman, whose identity was not disovered, met the prison commissioner at the entrance to the Duke street prison and belabored him over the head and shoulders with the whip. Dr. Devon, who is an advocate of forcible feeding, and is bitterly opposed to what he considers the farcical release of suffragettes because they are suffering from the effects of "hunger strikes, promptly knocked her down. The woman was picked up by a policeman and placed under arrest, but Dr. Devon refused to prosecute her and she was released.
