CAN'T GIVE ADRIANOPLE

Constantinople, Jan. 5.—All the information that can be obtained in official quarters concurs in stating that the Porte has said the last word in reply to the ultimatum of the allies. Adrianople and the islands in the Aegean Sea will not be surrendered, according to Turkish diplomats, even if the powers, through their ambassadors at Lendon, back up the Balkan States in their demands. is stated that Reshid Pasha, the leading Turkish delegate at the London conference, on Sunday made a private offer to the allies of the cession of the Rivers Maritza and Tunja as Turkey's western frontier, with the northern boundary to the southward of Kirk-Killisseh, the Christian villages around the latter place being also ceded to the allies. Furthermore, Reshid offered to have the Turkish fortifications of Adrianople demolished. Adrianople, however, was bound to the Ottoman molished. Adrianopie, nowever, was bound to the Ottoman Empire by traditions of sentiment and history, and the Porte would rather renew the war than abandon it. Turkey, declared this minister, had already practically ceded five of its six European vilayets and it would be sheer territorial gluttony for the allies to ask for more.

Intellects in Canada This Century. Rev. W. H. Harvey, in the course of his evening sermon in the Askin Street Church on Sunday, stated that it was his unalterable belief that this century would see produced in Canada men of the greatest acumen, ability and intellect. This he believed possible through the fusion of the numerous races which were emigrating to Canada and making their homes here. In connection with this fact he stated the work of the home missionary was prepared and ready for him. It was necessary to lay a deep and sure moral foundation, and to have church evangelization keep pace with the growth of the country. Four hundred missionaries stationed them to any sufferer."

A revival in congregational singing was strongly advocated by Rev. J. G. ACTIVE IN PUBLIC LIFE was strongly advocated by Rev. J. G. Inkster in his Sunday evening discourse in the First Presbyterian Church, the sermon bearing on the dedication of the new organ. The minister desired singing on the part of his congregation and deplored the habit of a great part of the audience who would stand lifelessly and listen to the choir. He contended that singing is a copartner of terday afternoon at the Wellesley preaching, and even if the sermon was 'dry," the service would be a great benefit to all if the singing was good. Mr. Inkster cited several instances in the Bible where music had been an im-Hon. He was also pleased to see that music was becoming an important subject on the public school curriculum, requiring a special superior to have it taught properly. The minister maintained that every man and woman has a capacity for music, but it was to be greatly regretted that so small a percentage had their ability along this line cultivated. He stated that there were two ways of having musical qualities developed, notably, through the teaching of experts, and through the desires and efforts of people themselves. In conclusion the minister stated that the new organ was dedicated that it might lead the congregation in singing and have them appreciate to a greater extent the sweetness of music. It was not purchased for the purpose of having the audience listen to the choir
