this place, had a lawsuit on Wednesday over a trivial matter, and Miller was the loser. He swore he would get even, and after the trial shouldered his rifle and went to a field where shouldered his rifle and went to a field where shouldered his rifle and went to a field where S. C. Kinsey, one of Oderholt's witnesses, was ploushing. Miller first killed Kinsey's borse and then shot Kinsey twice, inflicting mortal wounds. The slayer then went to another field where Oderholt was at work, and first killed Oderholt's horse and then Oderholt himself. Miller afterward went to the hut which served as his home, and setting fire to the place blew his own brains out. His blackened corpse was found in the debris. Beside him isy two guns and a bowie-kinfe. Miller was a foreigner. Kinsey and Oderholt were among the most respected citizens of the county.
