though still holding on to their stocks, are to-night thoroughly disgusted with what they term the market's hard luck, and look forward with some uneasiness to Saturday's bank statement, which will doubtless be a poor one. All these bad facts about the market are well known, however, and while they may prevent any immediate advance, and may cause fractional breaks, we do not look for any serious declines. The present market affords many attractions for those people who are satisfied with small profits and quick turns, and many of the local traders are making money buying on the weak and selling on the strong spots. This seems to be all there is in the market at the moment.
