saw that there was prospect that work was about to begin on something.

The organ reminds us of a gentleman who is now mourning the stagnation in real estate in this city. He bought a piece of property for $1500. Soon after he was offered $3000 for it. He said to himself if it is worth $3000 to me. The bids for the favored piece of land went on increasing until they reached $7500, but he still mumbled his old philosophy, If it is worth $7500 to him it is worth that to me. The bids stopped, however, at this last figure, and now the philosopher would like to make a dicker with that man who made him the first offer. The story applies to the blue ruin organ aptly. It has no idea what would be fair terms for carrying out any of the public enterprises that are now being discussed. All it knows is that it will not accept any of the offers made by anybody, no matter what they are. It simply takes its stand on non possumus, or to translate very freely, stick-in-the-mud. Mr. Edgar's charges against Sir Adolph Caron are compared by someone to the act of which Mr. Mercier and Mr. Pacaud were guilty. We can scarcely believe that anyone carefully examining Mr. Edgar's charges could honestly come to the conclusion, even if Sir Adolph were guilty of accepting sums of money from railroad enterprises, which had been bonused by the Dominion Government, that his case was if the same class with the various enterprises of Mr. Mercier. In the latter cases the money was extracted by durees. The receipt of the money granted by Government was made conditional on agood fat slice of it being handed to the toll-takers. There is no charge of this nature made in Mr. Edgar's bill of complaint, and it marks a very wide difference between the two cases, even on the presumption that the whole of Mr. Edgar's charges that the money was improperly granted to the railway company by Parliament or corruptly administered by the Government. Were such a definite charge as that made by Mr. Edgar there would be something serious for Parliament to investigate: The allegations against Sir Adolph would seem to be such as the ordinary courts are appointed by statute to deal with. If the Postmaster-General has been spending money I avishly in Quebec constituencies it is remarkable that his opponents have never hauled him across the red-hot coals of the Controverties. The ended to the red with the same of the politicians, If its complete that his components have never hauled him across the red-hot coals of the Controverties. gratified at this free advertisement for their handsome steamer, but really, gentlemen, we had no designs on your lake cities. All we thought about was the wily red man of the north shore of Georgian Bay, who has a fondness for purse seines and other destructive methods of luring the finny inhabitants of the lake from their fastnesses. As for the Kingston defences, which are called the gateway of the great lakes, we don't mind telling you that they are somewhat down at the heel, and there seems no prospect that much will be done to mend that state of things.

"A Barrel of Money" Next Week.
At Jacobs & Sparrow's Opera House next week "A Barrel of Money" will be the attraction. It is a bright comedy and contains a strong plot. This involves the story of a wealthy mill owner who has defrauded his niece, Roxy, of all her property, and just as he tells his confidential clerk of his intention to restore the property to his niece he is stricken down by a paralytic atroks, which destroys his reason. There is a plot to destroy the document which conveys the rightful property to Roxy, and the frustrating of the plot in the iron mills at night arouses the andience thoroughly. The stage is turned into a machine room of a mill, with real shafting, wheels whirling and steam escaping. In this scane Roxy is tied to a hage belt and the machinery is set in motion by the villain. Her rescue forms the strong scene of the play.

Not Intended For Public Worship.

The Mormon Temple is not intended to be used as a "house of worship," as many suppose. Public services are never held in the temples. They are intended for meetings of the priesthood and for the performance of ordinances and ceremonies like those of baptism, marriage and the training of members into the almost numberless degrees of priestly functions. The general public is not permitted to enter these temples after they are completed.

At this time the towers are surrounded by scaffolding clear to their tops, and it was on these altitudinous platforms that the choir stood to-day, and sang their song of rejoicing and thanksgiving.

When each of the towers is lit up with electricity, the lights will penetrate-like a beacon the darkest corner of the valley. The light on the central eastern tower is to be placed below the statue of the Angel Gabriel, which crowns the pinnacle, and it will be reflected upward so that the figure will be illuminated.
