

The railway journey of 119 miles from Bombay to Puna is one of the most beautiful in the world.

Kalyan is an ancient town, but with no antiquities left worth notice. It is now a thriving place, an important railway junction, with a population of 14,000, most of whom get their living by husking rice, the staple industry of the district.

Neral is the station for Matheran, a beautiful hill sanitarium, 2,460 feet above the sea, a favourite resort of Bombay Europeans. It is an eight-mile climb to Matheran, but by writing the day before to an official known as "the Superintendent," at Matheran, ponies or palkis with coolies, will be provided to meet the train. The charge for ponies is two rupees each, and for palkis with
