

Canadian Poultry Review.

DEVOTED TO POULTRY AND PET STOCK.

Vol. 2.

STRATHROY, ONTARIO, AUGUST, 1879.

No. 9.

DARK BRAHMAS.

We reproduce this illustration in the hope that it may have some effect in awakening a greater interest in this grand variety than has been displayed during the past three or four years.—Dark Brahmans have much of beauty and utility to commend them, and the difficulty in producing fine specimens, instead of deterring our experienced breeders from adopting them, should be an incentive to give them their undivided attention. A skillful breeder, with good stock, would certainly find breeding them a financial success. A number of fine old birds, and of