A MODEL HUSBAND.

Newest novels he would bring latest songs for her to sing, and he never strayed away from home at night.

WHAT TO TEACH YOUR GIRLS.

Give your girls a thorough education. Teach them to cook and prepare the food of the household.

be tempted to say something that might afterwards cause me regret, I rose and went to another part of the house.

"My brother keeps a number of cows, and we sold milk to many of the villagers who kept no cows. Happening to be in the kitchen pantry one day when one after another came for milk, I was astonished at their familiarity with my servant, and I was also astonished at the thorough knowledge (evidently drawn from Bridget) they displayed concerning our house and all its workings.

"I prefer to keep house in the city, where it is not necessary for either mistress or maid to make the acquaintance of the next door neighbor, and where it is not the custom for servants to spend afternoons in the streets, while their employers stay at home and finish the neglected work.

I heartily endorse the sentiments of my friend. The best servants I ever knew were employed by a woman who was scrupulous in her exactions of duty; at the same time she was kind and generous to her employees, who generally remained in her service until they had homes of their own.

THE KITCHEN.

GOOD FOR HOT DAYS.

Here are two good recipes for mayonnaise for salads to mix with lettuce and canned salmon, chopped chicken or veal: 1. Four yolks of eggs, 1 teaspoonful sugar, 1 teaspoonful salt, 1 teaspoonful mustard, 1 teaspoonful white pepper, 1 salt-spoonful cayenne pepper, 1 pint vinegar, 1 heaped tablespoonful butter.

2. Take the yolks of two hard-boiled eggs and rub them till they are very smooth. Add to these a teaspoonful of mixed mustard, a quarter of a teaspoonful of white pepper, a pinch of cayenne, a very little salt and two tablespoonfuls of thick cream. Mix all the ingredients thoroughly and then add a very little at a time, enough good vinegar to bring the sauce to the consistency of thick cream.

Good Work.

Mrs. G. M. Young, Sulley St., Grove St., London, Eng., was cured of lumbago by the use of the contents of one bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, after her case had been given up as hopeless. It has no equal.

Origin of the Red Flag.

The red flag of anarchy and socialism was originally a symbol of law and order. In France on Oct. 21, 1789, it was enacted that in cases of riot, rebellion, or disorder this flag should be carried before the National Guard to warn the disturbers of the peace of the approach of official interference. For this purpose it was used only once, and then on the field of Mars in Paris on July 17, 1791, on the occasion of the riot caused by the Jacobin petition for the deposition of the King.

Captain Verney Expelled.

LONDON, May 12.—The House of Commons to-day expelled Captain Edmund H. Verney, member for North Buckinghamshire, in consequence of his being sentenced to one year's imprisonment for conspiracy to procure a government for immoral purposes.

After the expulsion of Capt. Verney First Commissioner of Works Plunkett, as a preliminary expulsion of Edward DeCobain, charged with immoral conduct, moved that the House be supplied with a copy of the warrant issued for DeCobain's arrest.

ORIGEN OF MERMAID STORIES.

The dugong, a species of the whale found abundantly in the waters of both the great oceans, but especially off the coast of Australia in the Pacific, is believed to have furnished the slender basis upon which all mermaid and mermen stories have been founded. Its average length is from eight to twenty feet. It has a hand much resembling that of the human species, and breathes by means of lungs. It feeds upon submarine seaweeds, and when wounded makes a noise like a mad bull. Long hair in the female species, and hair and beard in the male, add to the resemblance of the head and neck. The flesh of this species of whale is used for food, and is said to have the flavour of bacon, mutton or beef, according to the part of the body from which the meat is taken.

CLIMBING FISH.

At Franquebar, Hindoostan, the perch climbs up tall fan-palms in pursuit of certain shell-fish, which forms its favourite food. Covered with viscid slime, he glides smoothly over the rough bark; spines, which he may sheathe and unfold at will, serve him like hands to hang by, and with the aid of side fins and a powerful tail he pushes himself upward. Thus may be seen the strange spectacle of fish and shell-fish dwelling high on lofty trees.

ROYAL FISH.

While old and wiseheads in the United States and England are carrying on a dignified quarrel over the ownership of the seat in Behring Sea, let us tell something about royal fish. You know that Kings and Queens have many rights and prerogatives. Well, one of these prerogatives of English rulers in olden times related to royal fish. Royal fish are sturgeon and whale, which are considered the finest of deep-sea fish. For this reason, "on account of their superior excellence," whenever one of these fish was thrown ashore or caught near the coast of England it became the property of the King. This seems very unjust to those who might secure the whale or sturgeon, for they were compelled to give it up without receiving any pay. However, the King had some ground for claiming these royal fish as his property, because it was he who guarded and protected the seas from pirates and robbers, and in those days there were very many of them. The most peculiar feature of the custom of royal fish was this—that while the whole of the sturgeon belonged to the King, only half the whale did. For it was a prerogative, as it is called, of the Queen that the tail of every whale caught in the way I have told you was her property, while the head was only the King's. The reason for this division, as given by the old records, was to furnish the Queen's wardrobe with whalebone; and this reason is more amusing than the custom is peculiar, for the whalebone lies entirely in the head of the whale. But there are many more as strange and amusing customs recorded in England's early laws. This right to royal fish was considered of great importance, and was carefully guarded for generations. It was also a prerogative of the Kings of Denmark and the Dukes of Normandy, and from one of these it was probably derived by the Princes of England.—Harper's Young People.

THE GORILLA.

Du Chailu, the great traveller describes as follows his first encounter with the Gorilla. He states that he was walking, as was his custom, some distance in advance of his companion ranged in single file, when his ears were saluted by a strange hitherto unheard sound. It riveted his attention at once. He cast himself down and with ear pressed to the earth listened breathlessly. Once more the oppressive silence was broken, this time by a sound of snapping timber, loud as a gunshot, and then there came crashing to the ground a great branch of a tree. Then from somewhere aloft there issued a prolonged, guttural growl, full of mischief, a blood-curling sound never to be forgotten. He got his rifle in readiness. The bombardment of boughs had now ceased, there was absolute silence, save for the thumping of his heart against his ribs. It thumped so loud that he feared it would betray him to his unseen and unknown foe. Peering into the twilight around and above him, he was suddenly aware of an object in his immediate neighbourhood. A short, hairy, manlike creature, with a black, hideous visage, fierce, staring eyes under low brows, and enormous mouth with huge canine teeth, his head set on an enormous chest and patch mounted on short, crooked legs, and furnished with a pair of arms long and muscular enough to squeeze a lion to death. This was the being he had come so far to behold; it was the creature that no white man, unless it was Hanno, 2,000 years ago, had ever seen. This was the gorilla. The brute was near him before he saw it, and now it thumped on its chest and emitted another long drawn, terrific yell resembling the sound of thunder in the sky. It advanced; its black lips curled away from its long teeth in a savage snarl. It was not going to wait to be attacked. He was eager for a fray, and advancing, bent his breast with sounds as from a big drum. Du Chailu was alone. He drew his rifle to his shoulder. He said to himself that the nearer the creature came the better would be his chance of giving it a fatal wound. Savage though it looked, it must have a vital part. He waited until his hairy body was less than twice the length of his rifle from the rifle's muzzle. Then he pulled the trigger, aiming for a spot of the heart. It was a shot upon which a good deal depended for the young explorer—not to mention the gorilla. The smoke hung in the still air, but he saw that he had succeeded. The animal lifted its long arms, and bent forward, uttering groans that were human but full of bitterness. It stumbled forward, and fell on its ugly face, and was dead in a few minutes.

Secret Societies.

The Bishop of Ardagh and Clonmacnoise, in a letter read in his diocese recently, said:

In the past ruin was brought on Ireland more than once by the betrayal of her sons, and by dissensions among her children and friends, and the sad story is being repeated. Therefore, we must cry out, and ask our people to cry out with us:—

Give peace, O Lord, in our days, for there is none other who fighteth for us but Thou, O God.

One of the most powerful agencies which the enemies of Catholic Ireland have made for us in the past for the ruin of our cause has been secret societies—Ribbonism, Whiteboyism, Fenianism, Invincibles, &c. The Catholic Church has never ceased to condemn, with all the weight of her divinely-received authority, this hateful brood, which like a plague of locusts, has devastated the land from time to time. Now we have reason to believe that at this moment the most strenuous efforts are being made to spread this plague of secret societies among our Catholic youth, under the plea of advancing our country's cause. Often under the pretext of encouraging innocent and invigorating sports, young men are coaxed into giving their names and contributions to these organizations, which religion and good sense alike condemn. One would have thought that the sad experience of the past would have taught our noble youth a lesson. The name of the informer who sells his brother's blood for money is hateful among our people. Assuredly the emissaries of secret societies should be equally so—wretches who, by pretending sympathy with our cause, sometimes by the hypocritical practice of religion, inhumanely themselves into the good graces of unsuspecting youth and corrupt them, and then, having made them children of hell twofold more than themselves, sell their blood. Instances of diabolical treachery such as this are known to all.

The New Vatican Library.

The new wing of the Vatican library at Rome is almost finished it is at the end of the extreme limit of the large court-yard of the Belvedere, where this joins with the gardens, and is situated exactly under the large hall of the Bibliotheca Sestina built and decorated by Sixtus V. This new wing, which was once a repository of the old and modern arms which themselves have been placed in an armory specially prepared for them, has been restored and adapted for its present use. Two lines of columns support the new vaulting of the hall, while iron book-cases, so that the books and documents will be safe from fire, line the walls. The vault is beautifully painted in fresco representing various subjects, the paintings themselves having been executed years ago by the celebrated fresco painter, Zuccari. The pavement of the hall has all been renewed in mosaic style. The restorations and adaptation of the hall have been carried out under the direction of Count Francesco Vespignani, architect of the Apostolic Palace. At the end of this hall will be placed the statue of St. Thomas Aquinas, which has been so admirably executed by the celebrated Italian sculptor, Signor Aureli. An idea will be gained of the size of the hall when it is known that it will be capable of holding over 300,000 volumes. This new hall will be named the "Leonine Hall." It will be another new and splendid monument of the munificence of His Holiness Leo XIII.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—The Great Need.—The blood is the life, and its purity our health as well as our existence depends. These pills thoroughly cleanse the vital fluid from all contaminations, and by that means strengthen and invigorate the whole system, healthily stimulate sluggish organs, repress over-acted action, and establish the circulation and secretions throughout every part of the body. The balsamic nature of Holloway's Pills exercises marvellous power in giving tone to debilitated and nervous constitutions. These Pills remove all obstructions, both in the bowels and elsewhere, and are, on that account, much sought after for promoting regularity of action in young females and delicate persons who are naturally weak, or have from some cause become so.
