

Stewart, B. C.

INTRODUCTION

It is the purpose of this pamphlet to draw your attention to the mineral and agricultural potentialities of a section of the British Columbia Northern Interior, a territory whose great future is looming large in the eyes of thinking men, and whose influence will ultimately be felt throughout the length and breadth of this western world, and beyond.

One

The discovery of the great anthracite coal fields of Groundhog Mountain marks an epoch in the history of the world, greater and more far reaching in its effects than the gold discovery of the Klondyke, for, when the last ounce of gold has been wrested from the frozen vaults of that treasure house of the North, millions of tons of coal will yet await the pick of the miner, and his children's children.