

tion to carry off the heated atmosphere. The Baron, in his official capacity, called the Emperor's attention to the matter last mentioned. His Majesty, always anxious for the welfare of his soldiers, assured himself of the fact, by a personal nocturnal visit, and immediately commanded that the number of soldiers per tent should be reduced to eleven or thirteen infantry, and eight or ten cavalry, in proportion to their respective dimensions.

---