

would think about it till next spring. The other said he would be glad to be instructed; he would come to the Credit soon, and perhaps leave some of his boys at the school. No opposition was expressed by any of them; and was judged that the prospects were favourable.

As I returned from the place, I thought of the thousands who once inhabited these woods and lakes, and whose generations have, for so many ages, melted away without the knowledge of revelation to direct them to immortality and an eternal life. Can any one—can any Christian, whose heart is warm with the love of God and man, sit down himself to the gospel feast, and forget his starving brother in the woods? Yours, affectionately, E. RYERSON.
