DEMobilIZATION WORK IN GREAT BRITAIN

London, Dec. 31—The great work of remobilizing the huge British army commenced on Wednesday Common and from now onward the work will be continued day and night until it is completed. The first men to be demobilized are what are known as pivotal men, that is, the men engaged in the work of demobilization, and those urgently needed for essential national industries. Broadly speaking, the order will be followed, the men to be demobilized first will be those experienced members of industries which most urgently require labor in the national interest. After them will come those men who have been longest in the service. This, however, is only the broad basis of the scheme, and there will necessarily be departures from this rule on many occasions.

Dispersal will, as far as possible, take place by locality and not by unit. A draft of demobilization will be selected by reference to the soldier's town or county and sent with reference to his unit. Thus a draft to be sent to Somersetshire, for instance, may consist of men from many regiments whose homes are in Somersetshire, and who intend to live there. Instead of sending them with their regiments to those regiments' headquarters, they will be sent to their home county for demobilization. There are many details to be attended to, amongst which may be mentioned the following:

Twenty-eight days' furlough for each man, with pay, ration, and family allowances.

Out-of-work insurance, operative for a year from the date of discharge and payable for twenty weeks.

A railway warrant for the journey home.

Any gratuities which may be due.

A protection and identity certificate.

To secure him these privileges, the soldier, in process of demobilization, must pass through various offices which have been so planned as to render the work as simple as possible. Each man, moreover, has to account for his equipment. He must hand over his rifle, his steel helmet, his gas mask, if he should have come from abroad, and he leaves the dispersal camp in uniform with his own private property. The scheme aims at demobilizing men from abroad and those in the United Kingdom in equal numbers daily, as far as this is possible. It also, when other conditions are equal, gives preference for early discharge to married or single men.
