DR. FRANK HALL

Dr. Ernest Hall, in Funeral Address, Tells of Late Physician's Fine Qualities

(From Monday's Daily.)

At the Metropolitan Methodist church on Saturday afternoon, on the occasion of the funeral of the late Dr. Frank Hall, a very beautifully worded address was made by Dr. Ernest Hall which was very expressive of the late physician's many sterling qualities and of the wide-spread grief caused by his death. He said:

"Friend after friend departs. Who hath not lost a friend. There is no union here of hearts. That finds not here an end."

We have assembled this afternoon to pay our last tribute of respect to one who has earned an enviable place in the thought and life of this community. Few citizens have enjoyed the popularity and respect so deservedly held by our late brother. A sorrowing audience attests this sentiment, and bids farewell to him, who for more than the quarter of a century gave his life for others. The passing of a soul is always a matter of solemn thought, but when the grave opens for a comrade taken away in the prime of life, in the blush of manhood, it calls us to consider the value of time, the uncertainty of our tenure, and the certainty of "the hour that ye think not, that awaits us all. Before me in this case, I see all that is mortal, all that remains of one who in the presence of distress, refused to consider his own comfort, all that remains? No; long after this poor body will have been reduced to its original elements, there will remain in the hearts and memory of thousands of those whose pains he has soothed, and whose way through life he has made easier, the grateful remembrance of one who was always willing at the call of pain, nor refused the cry of the sufferer. Knowing him as I have, for twenty years, and understanding him, possibly when others failed to comprehend, and having been intimately associated with him professionally, I am in a position to speak of the true worth of one to whom I looked in time of need, who not infrequently traced my bedside, and who was a faithful attendant upon my own family. Being possessed of a remarkably striking personality, self-reliant, assertive, skilful, with intuitive perception of a high order, he achieved, in spite of early disadvantages, a position reached by but a small proportion of the profession.

I have always considered Dr. Frank as we familiarly called him, naturally one of the brightest minds, and one of the most gifted of the medical profession in Western Canada. His extreme sympathy for the suffering, and great consideration for the poor, characterized his activities to an extent that frequently surprised his powers. The struggling artisan, the lowly and the unfortunate, have had no other such friend, and although his clientele included many of the wealthiest citizens, his charitable acts possibly outnumbered those of all others of the profession in Victoria combined. His private munificence was without stint. There are many before me who have participated in it. Its fullness will never be known until the book of Record be opened. The assistance given to the less fortunate of his relatives, his thoughtfulness and extreme kindness to his aged mother, all reveal the true man.

I remember several years ago, upon the eve of starting for Toronto, he asked me to visit his mother, giving me a handful of gold for her, saying: "Give this to my mother, it will help her to keep warm during the cold eastern winter." I called upon the old lady and delivered the gift. She received it and with tears of thankfulness for her boy, who so often remembered her, she pressed her lips to mine as only a mother could. Between us there was a bond of close sympathy. I recognized a great soul struggling at times against fearful odds. He had problems of his own, not known to the world. He had obstacles to surmount, and occasionally the burden weighed heavily. But to know, as I did, was to sympathize, but his triumphs were many, his successes at times brilliant.

In his untimely death the family and friends have met with an immeasurable loss. The community mourns a faithful attendant. The profession in Victoria here assembled around his bier, look upon the dead form of him whose work was such as to recommend his memory to a place among the greater ones. He who served with manly so well, whose last act was the relief of the pains of childbirth, dying in harness, suddenly as he had wished to die, may it be said of us, when the summing up of life and its works—if we believe that our duty to our Maker is best expressed in our duty to mankind—if he who renders service to God's poor renders service to him—if we believe that "inasmuch as ye did it to the least of these My little ones ye did it unto Me." Then I think of him whose memory here we honor, to whom the poor, distressed and sick ones never appealed in vain, of him who in the blaze of noonday labor was called to his account, of him whose nature knew no hypocrisy, whom to know was to love and whose body we now follow to the grave, and say of my friend of twenty years, "I hope to meet my comrade face to face, when I have crossed the bar."

At Bristol, Norfolk, a gardener has grown a number of potato plants to an extraordinary height. Many of them are over six feet high, while one measures over seven feet. The tubers have not in any way been affected, and as much as nine pounds were dug from a seven-foot tree.

TRIAL OF FREDERICK BULLOCK COMMENCED

Criticism of Grand Jury, Says C. J. V. Spratt, Not in Very Good Taste

(From Monday's Daily.)

The trial of Frederick Bullock, who is charged with attempted extortion from C. J. V. Spratt, of the Victoria machinery depot, in April last, commenced this morning before Judge Campbell, the county court, Bullock having elected to take a speedy trial. Two witnesses for the prosecution, C. J. V. Spratt and Andrew Bechtel, were called up to the lunch adjournment, and the cross-examination of Bechtel had not been concluded.

Hon. C. E. Pooley, K. C., who is appearing for the defence, conducted a long cross-examination of Mr. Spratt who, in answer to a question by Mr. Pooley that Mr. Spratt and Bechtel were mixed up together in the thing, the witness replied: "I don't put myself in the same position as Bullock."

Mr. Pooley: "Perhaps not, the grand jury has found a no bill in your case."

Mr. Pooley's remark caused a little amusement among the few in court. Mr. Spratt replied: "It is not very good taste of you to criticise the grand jury Mr. Pooley."

The evidence given by the two witnesses for the prosecution this morning was a repetition of that given by them in the preliminary hearing of the charge against Bullock in the police court. C. J. V. Spratt said Bullock had been employed as a storekeeper at the Victoria Machinery Depot and had resigned in March last year. In April the company had instituted proceedings against him for theft of a roll of canvas. This charge had gone to the police court and had been withdrawn. Bullock's lawyers had then written to secure damages for malicious prosecution asking $500.

The witness said he had never been president of the Victoria Machinery depot but might have signed for the company.

Articles of apprenticeship were put in hearing Spratt's name as president. He said he sometimes put himself forward as president and sometimes not. He had known Day slightly and had not much interest in looking into the purchases made by the purchasing department at the works.

Bullock had called on him and written a statement asking for $150. Spratt then took the statement from the desk and Bullock did not get it again. The letter was not signed by Bullock but was in his handwriting and read that if he received $150 no further action would be taken.

Andrew Bechtel, a shareholder in the business, told of several meetings between himself and Bullock, at which the matter of Bullock getting damages was discussed and for which consideration Bullock was willing to let the matter of the alleged stolen goods at the Victoria Machinery Depot drop. He wanted $750, said Mr. Bechtel, and if he had wanted to he would have taken it.

Mr. Pooley had just commenced cross-examining the witness when the court adjourned.

J. A. Aikman is prosecuting for the crown.

VANCOUVER HOLDS THE MINTO TROPHY

Beaten Saturday but Still World's Champions — Tecumseh's Spring Surprise

Vancouver, B. C., Oct. 9.—Although defeated Saturday in the final match of the series for the Minto trophy, Vancouver retains the trophy, having outscored the Tecumsehs of Toronto, on the series, 7 goals to 3. On Saturday the Indians sprung a big surprise by defeating Vancouver, 3 goals to 2, but they failed to overcome Vancouver's big lead secured in the first match a week ago.

The Eastern challengers played superior lacrosse to the champions, and deserved the win. Only the fine work of Clark, in goal for Vancouver, saved the cup holders from a worse beating. The play was clean and only a few penalties were handed out.

SCHOOL BY-LAW PASSED.

Ratepayers Endorse By-law for Purchase of Two School Sites in Oak Bay.

For 45
Against 4
Total 49
Possible vote, 94.

MANN CUP FOR VANCOUVER.

Toronto, Ont., Oct. 9.—The Vancouver team held the Mann Cup, the westerners leading by five goals, the net result of last Saturday's game. The Young Torontos and Vancouver met Saturday afternoon in the second and final struggle for the cup, when Vancouver won by 2 to 1. McKerrow was referee.

The Globe says: "It is not exactly correct to say that the Amateur Athletic Union disqualified the Vancouver lacrosse team for playing for the Mann Cup. The teams and officials disqualified themselves. The Union only put the fact on record."

The trackless tramway system, as tried in Bradford since June, has proved so great a success that the Bradford traction tramway committee has decided to extend it by some seven miles.

TELLS PITIFUL STORY.

Everett, Wash., Oct. 9.—A pitiful story is told by Mabel Arnold, 14 years old, and married, who is a prisoner in the county jail and will probably be sent to the Chehalis training school. The girl charges that her mother forced her to marry Harry Arnold at Vancouver, B. C., because she had gone away from home to visit friends and had not kept her parents posted. She did not accompany Arnold on the trip and declares that she always hated him and does not want to live with him. To the officers at the jail she stated that she preferred the training school to her husband, and begged to be sent there rather than return to him. The complaint against the child was filed by the husband, who charged that he could not control her, and that she refused to play at home.
