The Elder's Dream. PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON, For many years has stood, Its white spire pointing up to Heaven, The dwelling place of God.

Full forty years, good Parson G.
Had preached there and prayed;
Had cheered the old, and loving hands
Upon the caldren laid;
Had joined the young in Hymen's bands;
The poor and sick had blest;
Pointed to heaven each dying eye,
And laid the dead to rest. SOUR RISING, PERISTALTIC LOZENGES.

But now his work on earth was done Aud sadly, and with tears,
The grey-haired sexton, tremblingly,
Had tolled his seventy years.
The country folk from miles around
Came up to speak his praise;
Then buried him beside the church,
And went their several ways. Sarsaparilla

But Brother Brown and Elder Day Lingered when all was done, And, fain to talk church matters o'er RED JAMAICA Said Brother Brown, "The Lord that gave, Has taken him away;"
"We ne'er shall see his like again,"
Sadly said Elder Day. SARSAPARILLA

Space torbids the giving "I spoke to Mr. Blank to preach
The sermon next Lord's day;
He loved the parson long and well,
And knows just what to say,
'Twas mighty handy he could come. Else we should have to wait Till we had written up to B-And got a candidate. 'I'm going there next week, myself,

others?
T. C. STRATTON, Esq.
Montreal, Feb. 1st, 1877.
I cannot but regard the
formula from which Dr.
Chamning's Sarsaparilla is prepared, as one of the best possible combinations
to constitute an effectual remedy, for the cure of Blood Impurities. Sofar as my experience leads me And can inquiries make,
And leave them word to send a man
The Parson's place to take;
Tis now the second day of May;
We ought to pitch upon
Some one, and settle him, before Our haying time comes on But planting time, and hoeing time, And having time were o'er; And still, an installation seemed the treatment of all mous and Cachectic tions, as Glanduiar Franchs No nearer than before :

Each Saturday, upon the coach, Came to the town of A—— A man who wore a neckcloth white, And Monday, went away. But none of them came more than twice, For no one suited all; One was too old, and one too y One short, and one too tall : Some feared that one too strict would be, Too liberal, one, some thought; One at the maidens in the choir Looked, oftener than he ought.

hone that can be more highly recommended as safe, certain and reliable, and I have every confidence that such a remedy for general use, taking the place of the many worthless nostrums of the day, will be a great boon to suffering humanity, and its use will be attended with the most satisfactory results. It should independ the property of the sufficiency results. It should not be a sufficient to the sufficiency results. One hit the Squire's besetting sin,
And that would never do.
Didn't he pay the largest tax,
And own the finest pew?
In short, it seemed as if all love
And pears had left the town
That Wednesday morn, when Parson G.
Laid his life's burden down. advice, and will, no doubt, become popular with Medical men throughout the One noon, when Elder Day went home

From harvesting his grain, He fell asleep upon his chair (For weary was his brain), And dreamed, that on his sorrel horse He rode the valley through, And as he looked from side to side Discovered something new. A factory,—large it seemed to be—
And as he nearer drew,
A flaming sign across its front,
Met his astonished view:—

To order—warranted to suit,— Pastors and Teachers made." With open mouth and staring eyes. The startled Elder read. Straightway dismounting from his horse, He entered at the door;
The office sought, and, hat in hand,
The owner stood before.

"We want a pastor down at A——"

"Your order please to write—
If possible, we'll have him done
A week from Saturday night." He entered at the door

The man of trade looked black : He teared that from his former word He surely must go back.
At last 'twas done, the contract made.
And back the Elder went

To tell his brethren, and to wait

With tremlling, the event It was a bright September morn, And to the Church in A--, With joyful steps the people came, With trembling Elder Day; But rare delight his bosom filled, When, sitting in his place Behind the desk, he saw a man Of more than common grace

Placid his eyes and calm his mien, And with a benignant calm,
He gazed upon the Elder's pew
As if he conned a psalm.
The bell had ceased its ringing call,
Each man was in his seat; And anxiously they looked to see The Parson on his feet.

Vainly they waited, wondered, yawned; At last the Elder spoke: At last the Ender spoke:

"Please, sir, go on; it is not meet
Within this house to joke."

Calmly he sat, nor made reply;
Wondering, the Elder made
One effort more, went up the steps
And on his shoulders laid heavy hand, then started back

Before your waiting eyes

4 putty man; Alas! Oh Lord!

That thou shouldst ever see
Within this house, so great a shame,
Done to Thy cause and Thee!" n wrath, the Elder left the church And sought the man of trade,

Most wicked wretch! thus to insult

Both God and man," he said.

In anger and surprise; Brethren and friends," he said, "you

"Restrain yourself, good sir, I beg; Hear what I have to say; Full faithfully my workmen wrought By night as well as day; They tried their best with flesh and blood With bone and sinew good; They would not take the shape you wished,

NOTHING BUT PUTTY WOULD

You'll find a crank upon his back, And if you wind him up, We warrant him to go one hour, We warrant him to go one Then gracefully to stop. 'He's not the man that I could wish. "He's not the man that I could wish, But still he's very nice; We've filled your contract to the word, And you must pay the price." The Elder groaned, and groaning, woke, Trembling with fear and shame. "The Lord be thanked, 'twas but a dream, Blest be His holy name."

The mild sun shone on all around, The mild sun shone on all around,
And gently wavel the trees,
The Elder shut him up alone
And fell upon his knees.

'Oh, Lord! forgive our want of faith,
Our bittern ss and pride;
Choose Thou for us—we know not how—
A man to be our guide.

"Tempted like us, straying, perhaps,
But with his inmost soul
Turning to Thee, as turneth e'er
The needle to the pole.
We would not ask that Thou shouldst send
An angel down from Heaven, But that to us a good man's heart And helping hand begiven.

resting investigations into the effects of anaesthetics. Among other results, he finds that the fatal dose is just about double that which is sufficient to produce insensibility, and a dose about midway between these two extremes will very readily produce anaesthesia. Of the anaesthetics in common use, he finds chloroform the most dangerous, ether ranking next, and protoxide of nitrogen being safer than any other tried

In a lecture upon the "great ,comet of 1881," the Astronomer Royal for Ireland, Prof. R. S. Ball, states that collisions of the earth with comets have often occurred, and others will doubtless occur in the future. The last of these collisions was in June, 1861, when the earth passed through the tail of a large comet. Had the earth passed through the densest part of the nucleus, he did not know what the result would have been, but thinks the consequences would not have been serious. On the occasion mentioned, the only indication that a collision had taken place was the peculiar appearance of the sky as observed at what was probably the very time when the earth was enclosed in the tail of the comet. It has been discovered by M. Tommasi that surrounding the electric arc by tubes filled with cold water produces a great effect upon it, the luminous power being much weakened, and the are itself so much affected that a slight puff would extinguish it. A Vienna chemist has made a new glass, containing no silica or other ingredient of ordinary glass. Its most important property is that it may be used to glaze iron and other metals. On a recent occasion the bread distributed to a cavalry detachment at Oran, Algeria, was found to be mouldy, although made only forty-eight hours before. Refusing to eat it, the men threw it to their horses. Two of the latter ate each about a pound of the bread, which resulted in a true poisoning, seriously injuring one of the animals. The bread was investigated by M. Megnin, who found upon it two kinds of mould, the sporules of which he believed to have existed in the flour before the bread was made. One mold, Ascophora nigricans, formed a flaky, sooty-colored cover; the other, Oidium aurantiacum, existed in spots of a salmon color, which multiplied very rapidly. Tried upon dogs, the former was found to produce a much more violent sickness than the latter, although considerable action was produced in both cases. From 8000 ments, Dr. Chavanne has calculated the average height of the entire continent of Africa to be not less than 2150 feet. This high figure is evidently due to the great extent of the high plateaux in that country, surpassing even that of

Asia. Experiment has shown M. Maiche that sounds of different characters produced from two separate sources, can be sent simultaneously on one wire and re. ceived separately. At the receiving station, he used two telephones of different resistances, and at the transmitting end, caused a music box to operate upon a microphone while an induction telephone transmitter was spoken into at the same time. The musical sounds were reproduced in the telephone of least resistance, and the vocal sounds in the other, so that with the two telephones to the ears, the listener could hear the music by one ear and the speech by the other. In a recent address to the Balloon Society of Great Britain, Mr. W. B. Woodbury predicted that photographers will be able at no distant day to obtain from balloons bird's-eye views of any city or town, photographed true to nature and showing every detail with sufficient clearness to serve many purposes. The motion to which the camera must be subjected is the chief obstacle to the successful practice of balloon photography, but he believed that the extremely sensitive plates now prepared must serve in a considerable degree to overcome this difficulty. He hoped that another year would show some advance in this particular branch of science. Some time during the coming year, an exhibition is to be held at Berlin of articles pertaining to the "science and technology of health, and the saving of life." It would seem that such exhibitions ought to become epidemic. The principles of the new rapid ship, now being constructed at Geneva from M. Ravul Pictet's plans, were lately described to the French Academy. The vessel is to be broad and quite flat, and so built that the bottom will constantly receive an upward thrust, tending to lift it from the water. This will lessen the draught of the vessel, and consequently diminish the resistance of the water to its passage. M. Pictet calculates that he will be able to obtain a speed equal to about three times the present average. A practical test of the new ship's capabilities is awaited with much interest. An electrical elevator, worked by a Siemens machine, has been one of the many interesting novelties of the Paris
