The "World" and the Community.
It may be assumed that it makes no difference to the people of Chatham whether the record of the editor of the World from drowning was made on a certain occasion with the assistance of either or both of the gentlemen whom the ADVANCE recently and laudably mentioned in this connection. It ought, however, to be a matter of concern to the community that its newspapers employ language in dealing with this or any other subject which does not reflect credit on themselves, those who support them or the place in which they are published. The person who penned the language employed in the World of Saturday is a School Trustee of the town and the pupils in the public schools are, perhaps, having their plastic minds impressed with his style of expression as a model in language for their imitations.
